staff.

The Civil Service pay issue has been clouded in the past two weeks by the GCHQ issue but a meeting of senior union officials tomorrow is likely to be told that negotiations are to be reopened after the overwhelming rejection of the Govern-ment's offer in union consultation exercises. The unions are arguing that the Government should honour the findings of the survey by the Office of Manpower Economics of pay movements in the private sector. It showed that, to keep pace, civil servants needed increases averaging 6 per cent. The unions are pressing for a deal based on the upper quartile results in the report where there was a 7 per cent settlement figure.

Some union officials are essimistic about the chances of an early settlement and believe the negotiations could drag on

Talks about talks bring hope

A meeting at the Advisory Conciliation and Arbitration Service tomorrow offers the the first hope of ending the 10-week strike at a social security computer centre which threatens payment of increase in November for eight million pensioners and seven million recipients of child benefit. Peter Davenport reports

The small, wooden hut outside the main social security computer centre at Longbenton in the north-eastern suburbs of. Newcastle upon Tyne, is clearly at odds with the high technology complex beyond the gates. But it has become the symbol of an increasingly bitter strike involving 400 computer staff who handle £18bn of pensions and benefits payments a year and the national insurance contributions of 28 million

Price war unlikely as Sealink goes private

Better food and shops are likely to be the first changes the public sees on board the newly privatized Scalink.

But Sea Containers Ltd. which takes over the ferry company from British Rail this week, is unlikely to start a price war to win passengers from its competitors. Nor are changes expected overnight - certainly not before the busy summer season is over. Under the deal announced last week by Mr Nicholas Ridley, Secretary of State for Transport, Sea Containers paid £66m for Sealink. On past form the company will spend as much agan investing in its new Sea Containers is registered in Bermuda and mainly American owned, but has its headquarters and more than half its business in Britain. Its founder president, Mt James Sherwood, made his name pioneering the leasing of maritime container equipment in the 1960s, but is now determined to move into leisure. He has spent £8m reviving the Orient Express and owns the Cipriani Hotel in Venice.

But the best clue to Sealink's future may be the experience of the five former British Transport Hotels bought by the company from BR last year.

Only now, after a year of careful studies, are major plans for changes emerging. The hotels, in York, Scotland, Cornwall and Stratford-upon-Ayon are now being slowly upgraded and refurbished. Mr Sherwood's sim, a company spokesman said, is to emphasize the individual character of each property.

Although Mr Sherwood is said to have visited most of Sealink's major operations, a similar pace of change is expected at the ferry company. Eventually, however, Sex Containers attempt to make Bripain's largest ferry operator more profitable is expected to lead to sometimportant changes for its 37 ships and 10 harbours.

Passenger services to the Channel Islands seem certain to be limited to the daytime, and to operate from Weymouth only. In contrast, passenger services to the Isle of Wight from both Portsmouth and Lymington are expected to be modernized, with some new and faster ships. #### £540m EEC food stored in Britain

By Anthony Bevins Political Correspondent

More than half a million tonnes of food, worth £540m, are being stored in the United Kingdom by the EEC intervention board.

The value of food held in store has increased by more than half since the beginning of last year, and the latest intervention board accounts, for 1982 show total storage and handling costs of about £31m, compared with £20m for 1981.

The latest available breakdown for stocks held throughout the United Kingdom earlier this month is barley, 84,336 tonnes: breadwheat, 93.082 tonnes; feedwheat, 869 tonnes; butter, 155,248 tonnes; butter, 155,248 tonnes; skimmed milk powder, 171,661 tonnes; and beef, 15,159 tonnes.

The Prime Minister has said that stocks in Britain are held in stores in 165 different towns and cities, some of them with more than one store.

Runcie in secret talks with kings in Nigeria

From Eddle Irob Lagos

Dr Robert Runcie the Archbishop of Canterbury, who is attending the sixth Anglican Consultative Council here, has discussed the Anglo-Nigerian diplomatic conflict with three leading Nigerian traditional rulers known to have influence with the ruling Supreme Military Council.

The independent Guardian newspaper in Lagos, quoting usually reliable sources, said yesterday that last Wednesday Dr Runcie secretly met three traditional obas (kings) in Lagos. They were Sijuwade, the Ooni of Ife, Oha Oyebade Lipede, the Alake of Abeokuta, and Oba Sikiry Adeona the and Oba Sikiry Adetona, the Awajale of Ijebuland. They discussed the diplomatic problems caused by the attempted abduction from Britain of the former Nigerian politician, Alhaji Umaru Dikko, 17 days

Dr Runcie, who, sources say is a close friend of the Ooni of Ife and the Alake of Abeokuta, was accompanied Dr Timothy Olufosoy, the Anglican Arch-bishop of Nigeria. According to the Guardian, no details of the discussions were disclosed, but one source described the meeting "very frank and cordial."

The three kings later the same day met the Nigerian Chief of State, General Muhammadu Buhari, ostensibly to restate their support for the military government".

was with Jeremy Brett as Mirabell and Robin Phillips directing, but it was my first Canadian season and I was so befogged and terrified by having to do a Cleopatra a few weeks later that I managed to wipe the whole thing from my mind. Just as well, really: this can be a fresh start. They're already talking about it moving on to the Haymarket, but that seems to me a bit previous: let's just get through Chichester for now.

don't really know why I've been away from the theatre, any theatre, for so long: the last thing I did was Virginia and I found that grindingly difficult and very depress-ing, so that put me off for a while. there I wondered hopefully, a faint sense of a National government in exile down in West Sussex? Gaskill, Also the Canadian seasons came to an end when Robin Phillips left there, and I've never really known what to do when I wasn't in a company. I started off with Kenneth Williams and all those revue people, then I knew I had to get out of that so I went to the National, and then

> "Since then it's been a drifting time, and none of the offers I've had have made me want to rejoin a company. Mind you, there haven't been that many offers: the curious thing is that when you're inside a company the parts seem to come along just because you're there. When you're on the outside, then suddenly the theatre and television seem to be made up of lots of little clubs with the members all working away inside them and the non members just hanging around watching from the outside.

"That's why I like films: they take you away and give you a whole new set of worries. I went to Hungary to do a sort of Guardsman with Christopher Plummer and then I did two comedies with Michael Palin, one he wrote himself (The Missionary) and the other is a new Alan Bennett script called A Private Function where Michael is a chiropodist and I'm his wife and it's

Miss Smith has just had her age hitewashed out of several hundred Chichester programmes, on the understandable grounds that it is nobody's business but her own, and there is already quite enough to worry about; it is anyway not too hard to fathom as she lists an OUDS Viola at Oxford in 1952. But there does now appear to be a very real danger that her stage career has gone into soft focus over here, and that seems to me a very strong indicament of both the National and the RSC management They say you never forget how to act that it's like riding a bicycle but I'm sure this time that if I'd left it any longer I'd have been off the bicycle altogether and on to a tricycle. They also bang on at you about recharging your batteries; what happens when they go totally flat? The trouble with an actress's life is that there's no glissando: just one horrendous leap from Juliet to

Lady Bracknell. 'I really don't see myself as Dame Maggie, bravely battling on into my theatrical eighties; on the other hand acting is what I do for a living, and I would like somebody to tell me what I should be playing next. Olivier and Robin always did that for me: now I come back to a theatre which seems to have changed in some odd way during the years I was in Canada. Nobody seems to be in charge: just a lot of little groups all carrying on as best they can. Apart from the Virginia Woolf, I haven't done a new script in 10 years; even the Stoppard Night and Day was only on Broadway, where it flopped largely because the audience didn't seem to have the faintest idea what we were talking about, especially when we got to the bit about Cash's name tapes.

"I've hardly ever worn modern clothes on a stage in this country, oven Private Lives was a period piece, and the trouble is that I'm really no good at managing my own career. I can never think of a part I would be remotely able to play unless somebody else tells me just to go ahead and do it and stop worrying. In fact of course one never stops worrying, but at least when you're in rehearsal you feel you belong, and down here in Sussex there isn't the stress of a West End opening. Without the theatre there seems to be no shape to my life at

"I do now feel terribly remote: I've become a sort of Sussex recluse and it is marvellous to be back among actors working on a classic script. At least now when I walk the dog I've got something really tangible to worry about, like forgetting the lines. If you are, like me a natural womier then it is such acrelief to know what it is you're worried about."

Not everyone, perhaps, has a weakness for the kind of play that consists of a hutful of soldiers shouring at each other. In Tom Kempinski's play, first seen in London in 1979, they have good reason to shout, being faced with shooting a deserter the next day, and amid-all the hysteria Mr Kempinski gets some good tough ironies out of it, as well as asking some uncomfortable questions. Roland Jaquarello's production has a growing sense of unreality; they might be Martians or Jacobeans, and you cease to care who shoots whom so long as they just get on with

That said, the situation stands at the intersection point of so many crucial questions: whether soldiers have a right to a conscience what happens when they question their function (this is Northern Ireland, Hilary Finch Tinker in the Falklands), or even whether there is any difference between killing an enemy, a traitor or any other fellow-man. Held at gunpoint and ordered to kill a comrade. you make no such distinction.

After the first half-hour, eemingly interminable for Peter-Hugo Daly's flow coarse backchat, nerves start to snap, Though Martin Phillips's sensitive youngster seems like-liest to crack, it is actually the brooding doubter Santo (Vincenzo Ricotta) who seizes a rifle and holds them all hostage: by a similarly theatrical reversal. Mr Daly's character starts uttering some telling arguments about the deterrence behind shooting deserters.

under-characterized, more's the pity that Crockworth the looming Glaswegian (Louis Mellis) is disabled by a shot so early. The cast gets an A for effort and for that concentration which is becoming an impressive Young Vic trademark; but the play leaves a nagging sense of having missed a clean bull's-eye.

Harlem's convincing classic adaptation

Giselle Coliseum

Manon/Beauty Covent Garden

The real test of a production like Harlem Dance Theatre's new Giselle comes when you start changing the cast. The ballet successfully survived that crucial moment on Saturday afternoon. At the première last Wednesday, it had been illuminated by the dancing of Virginia Johnson and Eddie Shellman in the leading roles. She is unusually tall to play the delicate Giselle, he is built rather on the robust side for a romantic dancer, but both have a sense of style and drama that made them outstanding in the parts even at their first attempt. Stephanic Dabney and Donald Williams, their replacements in the second cast, are in appearence more the type on expects, but less special in their dancing, although both very able. In a way, the future of Giselle in the Harlem repertory is predicated more by their sound, straightforward performances than by the other, more exeptional performers. This Creole setting for Giselle has brought the ballet as securely within the grasp of these mainly black dancers as for the Europeans among whom it was created; and, incidentally, pro-insights into its social relation-ships for jaded white observers. Derek Williams and Theara Ward as the very rich free black and his daughter to whom Albert is engaged can mix more easily and plausibly among the residents and neighbours of the farm where Giselle lives than can the stiff princes among the peasants of other productions. Their grooms look cheerfully self-conscious and smug among the farmhands. Albert's Europeanized friend Wilfred forms a natural link between the two

The Louisiana setting, which provides so attractive and natural a location for the domestic tragedy of the first act, also makes a sinister background for the ghostly rites of the second half, where lank branches hang low over the wampy bayou. Albert's arrival, in a flat boat punted by Wilfred, is both more striking and more likely than strolling alone through the woods.

The ghosts in this staging, in their chinging, fragile pale lifac dresses, are more voluptuous than usual, especially Lorraine Graves as their amazonian queen, which helps clarify the motive for their war on any men who trespass there. The very quiet ending, with Giselle's spirit blessing Albert before she vanishes, is touching.

Keith Saunders, in the matinee cast, gave a less intense account of Hilarion than Lowell Smith, but on similar lines. Yvonne Hall and Augustus Van Heerden are lively in the first act duet, but Judy Tyrus and Joseph Cipolla on the first night were more notable. Cipolla is an Italian American, a dancer of notable gifts, and I like the way that Harlem Dance Theatre has managed to accept this white soloist as completely as New York City Ballet formerly accepted Harlem's founder and director, Arthur Mitchell.

At Covent Garden, we are experiencing the bitter-sweet pang of seeing David Wall dance several of his great roles for the last time before leaving the stage to become associate director of the Royal Academy of Dancing. After The Sleeping Beauty on Saturday night, his last announced performance in a full-length classic, supporters hung a banner from the stalls circle proclaiming the end of an cra. an unfamiliar pariner, Bryony Brind, in Beauty - extra rehearsals each time for just one performance. His Lescaut in Friday's Manon showed his gifts for comedy and sinister melodrama at their beight, with a very animated and amusing account of his mistress from Karen Paisey. The Aurora for what will

The special quality of Wall is that he has combined an exceptional flair for acting with his very fine skills as a partner and a solo performer, all equally matched. One does not see such intensity among his potential successors - but perhaps I am unfair to young Bruce Sansom, whose Florestan was particularly stylish. The competition is that was vital to the success of the whole campaign.

Thomas landed at Ajax Bay on 25th May with a detachment of twenty men.

They carried with them their satellite communications equipment in just eight boxes. And within the hour they were set up, camouflaged and fully operational.

"I rang straight through to the Command Centre in Northwood! I think they were quite pleased to hear from me," Thomas recalls.

"The signal was making a round trip, via the satellite, of about 100,000 miles. But it sounded like I was phoning the next village."

With this channel to London open, communications began to flood in. Some days they received as many as five hundred, with at least twenty being 'flash' messages of the highest priority.

"There's an enormous amount of technical stuff to learn at the outset. But even more daunting is the fact that you have charge of around fifty to sixty experienced men.

Shortly after receiving my first posting, for example, I had to discipline a thirty year old Corporal and eventually recommend his transfer.

It's not easy passing judgement on someone who's been in the job\twelve years longer than you have."

The 'Satcom' at Ajax Bay became, in consequence, something of a nerve centre, frequently visited by the Commanding Officers of the Task Force.

"In most other regiments, a Captain will have little day-to-day contact with a Brigadier or a General," says Thomas.

"But in the Royal Signals you have to work closely with them on a regular basis.

That can mean unrelenting pressure on you and your men.

Mation

The equipment has to perform every time, or else."

Thomas and his men remained on air for 97% of the Falklands War. (In fact they were still fully operational some months after the war had finished.)

The only interruptions to service were caused, not by technical problems, but by Argentinian bombers and the Task Force's own Chinook helicopters.

The helicopters, in particular, caused such an immense down draught that they invariably blew the receiver dish off course, causing the signal to be lost.

"On one occasion, General Moore was making a vital call to London about the progress of the battle for Port Stanley.

Outside, my men and I were clinging onto the dish for dear life with helicopters thundering above our heads.

Not exactly text book stuff, I know. But you have to improvise when there's a war on"

Learning to communicate.

Jack Thomas attended Sandhurst in 1974 after finishing his A levels. Since his interests lay more on the technical side, he chose to join the Royal Corps of Signals.

He also opted to take a degree in Applied Science. He considered that the qualification would stand him in good stead both in the Royal Signals and in civilian life, should he leave the Army.

However, before he could read for his degree he had 3 years of soldiering to do.

His first task involved getting to grips with the main communications systems used by the Army.

Basically, any fighting unit in the field will be fully equipped with Clansman radio and will be in contact

Such equipment was new to the Army at that time. So Thomas was sent to carry out organisational trials in Denmark.

"The main component of the system is a dish, about five feet across, which transmits an extremely narrow radio beam.

With the aid of precise calculations the beam is aimed at a satellite in geo-stationary orbit, 23,000 miles from the earth.

The satellite receives the beam, amplifies it and then bounces it back to earth. Add to that a radio set, a teleprinter and a scrambling device and you have a fully operational 'Satcom'

Subsequently, Thomas and his men found themselves deploying the 'Satcom' in a variety of situations. The jungles of Belize, for example. And the rooftop of the Gleneagles Hotel in Scotland during a NATO conference.

He also found himself demonstrating the equipment in the Middle East.

Out in the desert he had to arrange a double satellite link-up so a local dignitary could speak to a friend laid up in a London hospital.

In retrospect, Jack Thomas would not swop his career in the Royal Signals for any other.

He feels he has gained far would have done in, say, a civilian telecommunications company.

"I think the Army pushes you that much further," he says. "You not only have to master the technology, but you have to make it work in situations of extreme stress.

You are given a great deal of responsibility early on in your career. And, most important of all, the chance to develop qualities of leadership."

I was sitting with a teacher from Canada, a young Welsh nurse and a man who did not speak but just fixed things with an intense, glazed stare. We re at the Tudor Rooms Mediaeval Tavern and Play-house, in St Martin's Lane, central London; its brochure says: "Come and relive the 1520s. A night to remember."

When I arrived, alone, I was accosted at once by the imposing figure of King Henry VIII. clothed most convincingly in orange and gold, though without the syphilitic leg bandage made so famous on

"Let me escort you, my dear, to the bar for a glass of mead. It's a drink of fertility", he said, an enormous gleam in his eye. If I was going to have him to myself like this, it would be a night to rembember indeed: ved, bedded and beheaded, before you could say, "Rough King Foul".

He left me with a girl in a mob-cap and long skirt handing out the mead. "What do you do here?" I asked her. "I'm wenching", she said.

The banqueting hall was done in wood panels, embel-lished with the odd Holbein facsimile. Large groups of Americans, mostly students, sat at long tables facing a stage. First a jester came on, acting very much like a nightclub MC, only in tights.

"Welcome to the court of our great King Henry", he said. "Tonight, the gentlemen are the lords and masters. The ladies are - second-class! A loud cheer crupted from the audience. It was a night of ye quaint olde English values, such as mis-

Outside, I asked the wench with the honey-flavoured sherry where the ladies' room was. She smiled, and pointed to a door marked "Chartels".

When I came back, King Henry was taking a picture of a man in the stocks, his punishment for losing the race to drink a yard of ale. He did not get tomatoes or old serfs thrown at him, just girls from the audience kissing him on the cheek.

Then Anne Boleyn came back on with the jester, to sing a song that went like this:

"Mead, mead! That's what we need! Oh yes, indeed!" The Queen applied herself to this, as to all other aspects of her role, in a carefree, wholesome way. Even when they pretended to chop her head off she did not let up her smile. And the energy of the girll

I found out afterwards why this queen had had quite spek an active reign: Jane Seymon was off for the night. So, too, was the belly-dancer, although the management apparently did not know this at the time. What became of the "Can-Can" girls, also featured in the brochument never discovered.

On my way out in the foyer, I found the jester, waiting around for his doubloons. Dressed now in trousers and a shirt, he looked somewhat more contemplative.

"How did you get into this line?" I asked him. "What did you do before?"

"I was a teacher", he said-"I gave it up to do Theatre in Education." A quick look at his face told me he did not think

Do. you remember the end of the Affair El Vino's? It happened in November 1982 when, after three previous court hearings Anna Coote and Tess Gill won a High Court ruling against the Fleet Street wine bar so perfectly described by clever Mr Kington in this newspaper as "not so much a place as a

And there the matter rested until last week when Triff Ramsey, the sales executive of a forthcoming magazine for working women, walked into the fairly new branch of El Vino's in Blackfriars.

She was looking sweetly pretty in a white jumpsuit trimmed with pink and worn with a matching pink access ories, this tout ensemble being just the ticket in which to persuade advertising managers to book a double-page spread in Ilm January issue.

As is sometimes her wont on entering licensed premises, Triff went up to the bar and ordered a kir. She was then told that she could not have a drink "because you're not wearing a skirt or a

Suddenly, it came to her that she had stepped into the dreaded time warp. This had not previously occurred to her "since so many wine bars have names like 'Vinos', so it didn't click that one called El Vino's was in way peculiar".

Miserably, she allowed her-self to be led, without her drink, to a corner, squeezed beside the telephone. When the friend she had arranged to meet arrived, weating a dress, they ordered a bottle of Bollinger, which was very gracious of them in the

Demarco mark-down

An Edinburgh Festival without Richard Demarco? Unthinkable: the man has presented almost 300 festival events since 1966. Not impossible: the future of the Demarco gallery is in doubt, since the Scottish Arts Council's decision to dock his grant by £8,000 next year and similar amounts in the following years. This year's cut alone removes 25 per cent of his grant, as the SAC begins to transfer funding The Fruit Market in Edinburgh and The Third Eye in Glasgow.

It is not the first time the SAC has given Demarco the cold shoulder. In 1980 it took away his grant altogether, he responded by raising £65,000 from friends in two years. But the man who has presented 900 exhibitions and introduced Tadeuzs Kantor and Joseph Beuys to Britain had to pay himself nothing in that time to survive as Scotland's impresario of the avant garde. This year, undeterred, he is putting on Demarcation, a periparation. tetic conference on "Art and the Human Environment", then a dozen exhibitions, including Anzart in Edinburgh (the first joint exhibition of Australian and New Zealand art seen in Europe), New French Photography and new paintings from Paris, New York and Venice, not to mention 24 theatre productions. "All we need is 20,000 visitors to make it work", he says.

Far tlung

The idea that Scotland is a branchline economy is familiar to businessmen and politicians. It's spreading to football, as the great Aberdeen team that has won the European Cup Winners' Cup, last season's Scottish League, and the Scottish Cup three years in succession, breaks up. Mark McGhee is off to Germany, Gordon Strachan seems suspended between Manchester and Germany, and now international defender Doug Rougvie is signing for Chelsea. To prefer Chelsea to Aberdeen shows a lack of judgment and taste that must puzzle many Londoners as much as it does us north of the border.

Capital venture

The new magazine Scottish Business Insider, riding high after four issues, is going into the talk business. In the autumn it will sponsor Scotland's first venture capital conference, at Gleneagles hotel. The conference seems to owe something to beauty contests: would-be entrepeneurs will make their case before an audience drawn from the managers of venture capital funds. A pity that the judges will not be provided with electronic devices to register immediate investment decisions: it would have been nice to see such flashed up on the screen. The magazine's proprietors, Ray Perman and Alistair Balfour, are well qualified to advise on the use of venture capital: they started the magazine with redundancy money from the defunct Sunday

Into battle

Sir Donald Cameron of Lochiel, whose ancestor was one of the first clan chiefs to join Bonnie Prince Charlie, has opened a new visitors' centre at Culloden Moor, site of the last pitched battle in Britain. The National Trust for Scotland has spent £800.000 on developing the site, including the clearance of a Forestry Commission plantation. About half the cost has been met by the European Regional Develop-ment Fund, the Highland Regional Council, the Highlands and Islands Development Board and the Countryside Commission for Scotland. Up to 200,000 visitors are expected annually. Numbers in the battle were: Jacobites 5,000, Hanoversors 9,000.

Ouirky

Connoisseurs of the unusual during the Edinburgh Festival might find their way to St Ceculia's Hall on a Sunday morning when Andrew Cruickshank will describe "My encounter with Soren Kierkegaard". The nature of the encounter is unknown. The suggestion that Kierkegaard presented himself at evening surgery in Arden House, Cannock Brae, is frivolous, though it would make a good episode for a positively final revival of Dr Finlay's Casebook: "There's a Finlay's Caschook: "There's a Danish gentleman to see you. Dr Cameron. I told him to wait till ou've had your tea." "Hrumph, Janet, did he give his name?" "He did not. It's my idea there's something a wee bit queer about

Why reselection is again an issue, by Julian Haviland

The battle Kinnock has to fight

the test the love and loyalty of the party which elected him leader a year ago. On Wednesday Labour's national executive committee will consider his proposals to amend the rules, only four years old, governing the reselection of Labour MPs. True to character, his followers have already formed clusters of those who approve and those who are affronted. The next few weeks will show apprehensive members of the battle-weary Labour Party whether cudgels are to be taken up once again in the debilitating cause of intra-party democracy.

Other keen observers may learn whether Kinnock's authority as the first leader elected by the whole party is as great as it seems; and whether he can be as cool and resolute in using it.

The present rules, require every Labour MP to submit once in each Parliament to the judgement of his constituency management com-mittee, in the name of "account-ability". This was the watchword of the Campaign for Labour Party Democracy (CLPD) which campaigned for a decade to secure the change, and also to take the election of the leader out of the sole control of MPs. The ferocity of those campaigns, with Mr Tony Benn in the vanguard, and of the parliamentary party's vain resistance, domi-nated the Callaghan and Foot years.

Neil Kinnock is the beneficiary of the new system for choosing the leader, which will endure. But he is now determined that the reselection rules cannot stay as they are, "Neil is made to reopen the argument", one prominent left-wing reformer said this week but without conviction The instinct of those associated with CLPD, and of their allies on the national executive committee, is to hold what they have gained and to fight for it as grimly as before. Their difficulty, as they have just began to sense, is that they will have to fight Neil Kinnock too, and if they do that they may be lost.

Kinnock, to their chagrin, com mands the new power-base which they themselves had built for him, and is now formidably strong. What has nerved him? The conviction that mandatory reselection is fatally. demoralizing much of his fighting strength in the Commons. Since he became leader. Labour MPs by the score have expressed anxiety about their seats, and have begged him to

The evidence has accumulated that in some seats "reselection" is a cuphemism for persecution. Rules for calling a dud or disreputable member to account may as easily be used to dislodge an industrious member if his face or his politics does not fit, or if a rival fancies his

Some on the right saw reselection from the first as an ideological weapon, designed to secure not the accountability but the obedience of MPs. Many on the centre and left, Kinnock among them, once favoured reselection, but experience of it has shaken them.

No one in the party can measure the problem, but some shrewd judges believe that up to a fifth of the parliamentary party, now reduced to 209 members, risk being kicked out or frozen out by their local parties before the next election. Enthusiasts on the left believe that 20 or 25 sitting Labour MPs whom they want removed would probably reselection. The Kinnock revisionists accept that figure, but estimate that up to 25 other members in their fifties still active and valuable, might choose retirement rather than spend their energy for the rest of this Parliament frustrating plotters in their local

No one has an exhaustive list of those at risk. Like the gravely ill, a few will discuss their symptoms - a costile management committee, or a faction working to oust them - but most will not. Publicity is no help. Frank Field, MP for Birkenhead, has been awesomely open and threat-ened to fight a by-election if deselected. His statements have only infuriated and alienated key sup-

Most who fight back prefer to do it in secret, working as steathily as their enemies at winning branches and delegates to their support. Senior figures are not so lucky. Gerald Kaufman, Peter Shore, John Silkin and Michael Cocks, all members of the Shadow Cabinet, are too prominent for their conflicts to remain hidden.

Mr Silkin is said to be in serious trouble at Deptford; the other three. in different degrees of difficulty, are all expected to survive. But Mr Shore, in Bethnal Green and Stepney, and Mr Cocks in Bristol South, may need the help of their leader's lifeline,

The Kinnock proposal looks timid. In fact it is shrewdly judged: it is as much as the trade unions will allow, and to have attempted more would have been futile. Kinnock proposes new rules that will allow but not compel a constituency party to hold a secret ballot of all members on whether the sitting MP should fight the next election. It is agreed that many MPs who have fallen foul of general management committees (GMCs) could win an appeal to the full membership, and that if they could not, they would not be worth saving.

Many disappointed MPs think Kinnock could have used his authority to go further and complete the adoption of one-member-onevote. A determined GMC, they argue, will never voluntarily share its power with wider membership.

Kinnock's tacticians have higher hopes. They believe that the taste for participatory democracy is growing in the constituencies; that the trend in last year's leathership election proved this, and that party members, given the chance to vote for or st their MP, will insist on taking it.

There is also a nice procedural point. When the GMC votes on reselection, it votes in secret and can more easily ignore its members wishes. But a preliminary decision on whether to let the members ballot would be taken openly, by a recorded vote. Those who opposed the widening of the franchise might be asked to explain why.

One other feature indicates a cunning designer. To coerce the constituency parties, whose activists led the fight for the present rules, would invite resistance. But since the Kinnock proposal would enlarge, not restrict, the rights of constitu-ency parties, it may be hard for the left to find respectable grounds for

Complain they will, however. There will be a row on Wednesday and anger at the party conference at Blackpool in October, Neil Kinnock should win, and may save some parliamentary scalps. But the struggle for power between the parliamentary and other sectors began soon after the Labour Party was born, and will not stop very

Christopher Walker on the hard bargaining after today's Israeli election

Will the fringe come out on top?

No Israeli election has produced a party with an overall majority in the 120-seat Knesset. From the present state of the opinion polls, there is no reason to believe that today's election - the eleventh since Israel was founded in 1948 will prove an exception.

Because of splintering among some of the smaller parties competing against the two main power blocks, Likud and Labour, there are signs that coalition building in the ensuing weeks could prove even more troublesome and drawn-out than in the past.

Although the spotlight has inevitably fallen mainly on the two dominant groups, the performance of some of the 24 smaller version particularly the relatively unknown Yahad, the new centre group run by the swashbuckling former defence minister, Ezer Weizman - could be crucial in determining the shape of the next government and, with it, the future of the Middle East peace

The complexities of coalition building in Israel are bewildering and the cause of such crude horsetrading that many Israelis say it has brought the whole political system into disrepute. But despite an articulate lobby pressing for electoral reform, the chances of it seem as remote as ever.

One result has been an inevitable watering down in the different ideologies of the right-wing Likud and left-wing Labour in an attempt usually lacking in dignity - to meet the demands of the smaller group-ings, particularly the religious parties, whose influence has been especially marked in the seven years since Labour lost power for the first time in 1977.

With some of the smaller parties, such as Techiya (Renaissance) on the extreme right and the civil rights movement on the extreme left, it is possible to predict with certainty that they will agree to form a government only with Likud or Labour respectively.

But many others have deliberately left their options open, hoping that the final gap between the main blocs will be narrow enough to give them strong leverage. Weizman, whose energetic campaining has been one of the high spots of the campaign.

has let it be known that he is looking for the post of finance minister in administration takes

Although many might question his wisdom, or even sanity, in seeking such a thankless position, few doubt that he stands a reasonable chance of winning sufficient seats to be able to press his claim from an effective power has claim from an effective power base. Another small group hoping to exert strong influence is the now truncated National Religious Party. which has so far managed to secure a place in almost every Israeli cabinet. This year, unlike 1981, when one of its leaders said openly "a vote for us is a vote for the Likud", the NRP has let it be known that its seats will be available to whichever bloc is prepared to pay the highest political

In recent years, the various religious parties have found themselves more at home with the Likud

(whose hawkish West Bank policy they favour) than Labour, which is probably why some Likud ministers are not yet as downhearted as might be expected from the opinion polls. Of all Israel's leaders, the last prime minister, Menachem Begin, paid the highest religious price for a majority, as such bizarre edicts as the weekly grounding of El Al on the Sabbath demonstrate. It is all very confusing to outsiders, who find such religious strictures hard to equate with the fun-loving beach party atmosphere portrayed in the tourist advertise-

This year, the religious parties are split more than ever, leading many secular Israelis to hope that their influence may finally be diminishing. But unless either the front-run-ner, Labour, or the ruling Likud can produce a remarkable spurt today, that may remain wishful thinking. Even allowing for the quirks of the small parties such as the Movement to Repeal Income Tax (sole candidate, Yaacov Berger of Tel Aviv) can confidently be ruled out. But others, such as the blatantiv racist Kach movement led by Rabbi Meir Kahane, may well secure representation and a place at the post-election bargaining table.

Already there have been indi-cations that the efforts by both Labour and Likud to temper their respective programmes in an effort to seduce the crucial 100,000 floating voters may have pushed some of their erstwhile supporters out to the extreme left and right of the spectrum.

The fear among those Israelis now deeply concened about the dire state of the economy is that the net effect could be severely to weaken the ability of the next prime minister be it Shimon Peres or Yitzhak necessary to effect a recovery.

than they have ever been, if radical changes in their preparation are successful.

With the difference between winning and losing measured in hundredths of a second, no detail in the fine tuning of their health has been considered too small. Even as they fly out from London in the next few days, they will be under a strict regime imposed by their director of coaching, Frank Dick.

During the 11-hour flight, the athletes will be reminded to get up every hour or so and flex their muscles on a walk around the jumbo jet. They must eat as if they were still at home, avoid fizzy drinks and deny themselves alcohol.

When they arrive in Los Angeles, they will immediately leave the city's notorious smog for the cleaner, fresher sea air of San Diego, a threehour bus journey south towards the Mexican border.

Critical to the entire strategy is the choice of a "holding camp" for the athletes at Point Loma College, San Diego, rather than choosing accommodation in the Olympics village in Britain's Olympic athletes will line LA. For 10 days before their up for their Los Angeles events in better physical and mental shape will relax, adjust body and mind and For prolonged high performance, prepare for competition.

> The Los Angeles hosts have drawn up sumptuous menus for their guests. Frank Dick has scanned them, and tossed them away. Instead, every member of his team will get a copy of his booklet, Nutrition For Athletes, usually costing 50p, and some free advice.

"Some of our people will be offered a choice of food in the Olympic village such as they have never seen before", he says. "It isn't just the quality of the food, but the quantity. During their 10 days at Point Loma they will eat good, nourishing familiar food - and only so much of it." As an added discipline, they will be confronted with scales on which they will be weighed every morning.

Frank Dick has drafted sample diets for different types of athlete. Biologically high-grade protein for strengthening muscle tissue, increas-ing speed of reaction and concentration, and readily digestible carbohydrates to provide reserve energy are particularly suitable for speed fat is seen as a major source of energy, but uneconomical. So in endurance events like the marathon and 5,000 and 10,000 metres, especially large amounts of carbohydrates - just over two ounces per stone of body weight - are recommended, along with high-grade protein. Once they get on to field or track, the athletes will be boosted by high-energy supplements in the form of drinks and compact

Dick borrowed the concept of. isolating his team from the mainstream of the Olympics from the East Germans at the Montreal games in 1976. I noticed they didn't arrive at the Olympic village until the last minute. Everyone was kept up country, in their own private camp. I asked their chief. Werner Trellenberg, why. awareness of their own health and fitness, sharpened by years of competition. But they cannot know all they may need to know, argues Frank Dick.

They are coming to the climax of their lives after years of preparation and their energies should be devoted to expressing themselves fully in every way - physically, mentally, emotionally, even spiritually. Our whole object is to keep them free of stress and problems in the final runup; to make them feel as relaxed in themselves as they can be in a strange, foreign environment, and to help them in every way we can to perform better than they have ever

Yes, we are talking about hundredths of a second. Can the way we prepare them in the last 10 days make the difference between a gold and a silver, or nothing at all? "My only answer is that we can try to make the probabilities of success greater, and the possibility of

Economy of words, but little result

Nobody talked much about work while there seemed to be enough of it about. But when a problem arises and refuses to go away, new jargon usually evolves to wrap its ugly outline in a pleasant haze. Something disagreeable and difficult is presented as being really jolly exciting when you look into it. That is what is happening to work - or to use its new booming title, the "world of work". It is a world which seems to be full of springboards and launching-pads, a sort of California of the mind.

Workspeak is a product of largescale unemployment. As the numbers of unemployed have remorselessly climbed, so there has been an equally remorseless increase in conferences with titles like "Images for tomorrow's work". These are usually addressed by a new breed of professors of work, who tend to have bright-coloured jerseys and eyes which gleam with benevolence.

These professors are often undercover SDP agents, and can be identified by their rejection of the old politics and their knack of minting such phrases as "we are seeing the gradual tapering off of the employment society," "We stand on a hinge of time," and "the social project of society is changing" (all these taken from Professors Charles Work Handy's The future of Work, Blackwell, £16.50, £4.95 paperback). Workspeakers also like to think up new categories of economy and society. To the "black economy" (fancy people doing jobs without paying tax), they have now added the "mauve economy" (fancy jobs which you can run from home, like telegram service), the "grey econ-omy" (unpaid activities like house-work) and the "SHE economy". which stands for Sane, Humane and Ecological and "would put people before things, recognizing that people's energies and skills are important renewable resources". I don't know about you, but I don't always feel 100 per cent renewable, especially in the mornings.

For all its charm, I cannot belp feeling that futurology is at least in part an escape from the present. This suspicion is fortified by the fondness for "scenario" as a term to describe a particular set of prophecies. A scenario is, after all, a script typically run up in haste to meet a theatrical need.

Francis Pym, in his remarks last week to the aforesaid conference on "Images for Tomorrow's Work" (organized by the church, as so many such conferences are, to show its social concern in an upbeat sort of way), said that patterns of work were changing at a tremendous rate. "Many people only have an inkling of the scale of the changes we will see in the future."

Quite true. We do not know what life will be like in 2001. Inklings are thin on the ground. Among legiti-mate inklings are indeed that the working week and the working life are likely to be shorter than they are today, just as they are shorter today than they were in 1901, and that there will be a whole range of new occupations now barely guessed at. It is also easy enough to predict that people will change jobs more often; that employment is more likely to become home-based and smallscale; and that cooperative enterprises, already multiplying at a great rate, will become a routine option rather than the product of a rare philanthropic initiative. But how much practical use here and now is all this imagining and predicting? How much do all these retty musings on the nature and future of work help governments, employers and trade unions to decide how to act?

In common parlance, "unem-ployed" has one single clear meaning: someone who is not at meaning: someone who is not at present performing a service at return for money, and says he wishes to do so. The price at which he would be prepared to work and the price which someone else is prepared to offer are therefore surely both highly relevant.

Yet the price of labour is the one topic which the professors in bright jerseys, ready to embrace so much, appear to shy away from. Even practising politicians like Mr Pym seem to shy away from it too, when they go on about the need for "more imagination" and "a new industrial partnership" and, above all, for "the fullest possible national debate". These are all very desirable things. Yet this kind of discourse does sather give the impression that there is some great elusive mystery about the obstinate prevalence of unem-ployment in western Europe, But is there? Jobs are not sorcerers' creations; they are contracts between people; and if there are not enough of them, the price is likely to have something to do with the shortage. If real wages in Britain had not increased over the last 10 years, it is a fair bet that unemployment here would still be at the more tolerable levels of the 1960s. After all, that is ust what has happened in the United States. Impossible in a highly unionized country like Britain? Lower wage rises mean lower employment. Militant trade unions destroy jobs. What boring things to say. How unimaginative. But sometimes it is important to go on saying what is boring to remind ourselves that it is also what is important.

Going away – do not disturb

Events of the past week have demonstrated that nothing excites hardship than loss of a job.

greater borror, panic and moral The knee-ierk left-wine opprobrium among the British people than to have their holiday plans disrupted - and that the merest whiff of such disruption is sufficient to bring a strike to an end.

Ian McGregor must be cursing his bad luck that coal mines are not among the customary summer resorts of the British middle classes. Pits can collapse, factories close, children can be sent untaught home from school – and the public will react with a degree of judiciousness in apportioning blame between employer and employee. But the family summer holiday is another thing. As soon as it appears to be in jeopardy, union officials run gibbering to the negotiating table and grab what they can get.

All the daily reports on the dock strike negotiations made it clear that all parties understood perfectly the power of this ultimate weapon. The employers tried to pin it on the unions by insisting initially, that there could be no distinction between passengers and freight; but the union officials dodged that ploy and continued to make it clear that, as far as they were concerned, passenger services would continue.

The lorry drivers, not caring who won or who got the blame, but simply wanting the thing to end, seized the weapon themselves to precipitate a crisis. A few television shots of stranded families waiting impatiently in their shorts, win-dsurfers strapped to the top of their estate cars speaking eloquently of anticipated delights so miserably postponed, succeeded where all the CBFs grim warnings had failed.

(Perhaps, though, there is one thing that tugs at the nation's heartstrings more urgently than the sight of people not being able to get away on holiday, and that is the sight of them not being able to get back. It may have been the pictures of holiday Britons languishing in Calais, and the thought of those cars full of damp sandy towels and spilling half-empty cans of warm Coca-Cola that really did the trick). In general our understanding of public opinion - or what the industrial negotiators assume public opinion to be - still seems to be at a pre-formative stage. Why, for instance, has the hint of threatened violence from the lorry drivers (was there really a risk that they might burn down Dover harbour installations?) been greeted with wry, perhaps even admiring sympathy, whereas the violence on NUM picket lines has been almost universally felt to be sickening?

A truck-load of purceying watermelons seemed, momentarily, more Science Correspondent of an outrage than the collapse of a whole neglected coal seam, and lack against the trade unions. But I am. sure the truth is more complicated. In these days when strikes are as much exercises in the competitive manipulation of public opinion as they are trials of strength, unions particularly the public sector unions - face a near impossible public relations task. They have to show muscle and yet appear to be morally in the right; to demonstrate eager-ness to conclude the strike as well as doggedness in sitting it out and most difficult of all - they have to hurt the public in order to attract public attention and support.

It is a tightrope: how to be disruptive without totally exasperat-ing the public; how to avoid immediate extreme frustration in favour of action which has a slower but still noticeable effect. One result of this use of the weapons fashioned for the fight against capitalism for a wholly different modern purpose has been that the result tends to be the opposite of that intended. Thus, a strike aimed at freight but not at passengers could potentially have done more damage to the economy (and thus eventually to dockers jobs) than one aimed at passengers alone. Similarly, the teachers' recent industrial action, which exempted children taking exams and concentrated instead on withdrawing our-of-school activities for younger pupils (including, this time, the setting and marking of homework and the writing of reports), probably has had more long-term effects than an assault ou the examinations would have done. (After all; subsequent alternative arrangements for the disappointed candidates could have been made.)

More than most workers perhaps, teachers would welcome a system of salary negotiation that avoided strikes: there has been considerable (though publicly muted) support for the SDP proposal of a guaranteed comparability review linked to a nostrike agreement. But meanwhile they are caught in the same archaic rimal as everyone else.

The worst of it is that for everyone, workers, unions, employers, public servants and government alike, it gets in the way of longterm planning - something this country has almost given up. Caught in the toils of perpetual crisis management, we seem to be suffering from a sort of year-long July madness. Maybe the appeal of those stranded holiday makers has deeper symbolic significance: the desperate desire, not to be frus-The author is SDP member of the GLC/ILEA for St Pancras North.

THE SHADOW OF THE COLONELS

Today is the tenth anniversary of the fall of the dictatorship in Greece. It will be marked there with appropriate messages and speeches, but not exactly celebrated, for it is too intimately connected with another anniversary which fell last Friday, that of the Turkish army's landing in northern Cyprus, which in turn was triggered by an event whose anniversary fell a week ago yesterday: the coup against President Makarios carried out by Greek officers of the Cyprus national guard, acting on orders from Athens.

The Greek "colonels" (by then represented for all practical purposes by General Demetrios Ioannidis, the head of the military police) brought about their own downfall by attempting to seize control of Cyprus; and so provoking, or providing the perfect pretext for, the Turkish intervention, That intervention was rightly seen by almost all Greeks as a national disaster.

All Greeks regard Cyprus as a Greek island, and they have sound historical and demographic reasons for doing so. But well before 1974 majority opinion both in Greece and in Cyprus had recognized that Turkish sensibility would not permit the incorporation of Cyprus into the Greek state. The independence of Cyprus under majority rule was, to all but the most nationalistic Greek officers and the fanatics of "Eoka B", an acceptable second-best. But once Turkey had openly and directly intervened that second-best was jeopardized and the stage was set for partition, if not for outright Turkish annexation of the

The Greek Cypriots under their Greek officers fought heroically against what they inevitably saw as a Turkish invasion of their homeland. (Alas, some of them also committed atrocities against their Turkish Cypriot fellow-citizens). But Greece, after seven years of military rule, turned out to have no military response to what should have been one of the most obvious military contingencies to plan for, even if it had not been directly provoked by a political action of the military regime. General Ioannidis had apparently counted on the United States to restrain Turkey. Once extent of apparent, the humiliated chiefs of staff in Athens took steps to depose him, and invited the country's civilian politicians to take over power.

The return of democracy was rightly hailed, by this newspaper among many others, as "one of the victories of freedom". But we were uncomfortably aware that it was a victory for which the leadership of the "free world" could claim little credit. "The tries. A characteristic of this strategic importance of Greece is The Times commented Ercal. on July 25 1974, "but realism in politics is not necessarily served by supporting regimes which reject the values of the alliance than the Soviet Union, and swing the country to the opposite extreme.

"Fortunately", the same leading article added, "This last danger has not emerged so far". Both Greece and the West were indeed fortunate that the reins of power in that crisis were assumed by Mr Constantine Karamanlis, who showed great wisdom and statesmanship in ensuring the establishment of a democracy healthier and broader-based than that which had preceded the military coup of 1967. As prime minister until 1980 Mr Karamanlis kept Greece firmly within the Atlantic Alliance, in spite of the strong anti-American feelings of many Greeks. He also secured her entry into the European Com-munity - and indeed it was the much firmer attitude of Western Europe (as opposed to the United States) towards the dictatorship which made it possible for him to convince the majority of his compatriots that the "free world" was not a complete misnomer.

As president since 1980 Mr Karamanlis has enabled Greece to pass the crucial test of democracy: a peaceful change of government by popular vote. A socialist government, left-wing by Western standards, has come into power without either itself suppressing democracy or provoking the armed forces to do so, and without breaking Greece's primary international links to Nato and to the EEC.

Thanks to Mr Karamanlis, and to the basic good sense of the Greek people who elected him, ten years of restored and strengthened democracy in Greece can reasonably be viewed as a success story. Yet Greece remains a source of anxiety for the West, and one that has been getting worse rather than better. Mr Papandreou's bark may be worse than his bite - he has stayed in EEC and Nato and has renewed the agreement on American bases - but he does have a very irritating way of talking as though he would really feel more at home in the Warsaw Pact if only that option were open to him. He insists on entering a reservation about almost every political statement put out either by Nato or by the with that of the Danes and the Irish, which makes it at present impossible for the European Community to acquire a meaningful "security dimension".

The trouble seems to stem not. so much from any profound ideological affinity with the Soviet block, but from a prickly nationalist perspective more typical of ex-colonial than of contemporary European counoutlook is that local conflicts are seen as more important than global ones. In Mr Papandreou's case, Turkey is seen as a far more serious and immediate threat they are supposed to defend, Nato's usefulness is judged contain the seeds of their own almost exclusively by its ability decay, and are liable to breed and willingness to protect Greece forces of opposition that can against Turkey, itself a Nato member.

To most dispassionate Westem observers, Mr Papandreou's specific fears about Turkish aggression seem groundless or at least wildly exaggerated - per-haps deliberately so with a view to sustaining a Greek national consensus around the left-wing government. Although Turkey claims an economic zone in the eastern Aegean around and among the Greek islands, and resents the fortification of those islands, there is little or no evidence of active Turkish preparation for an offensive either there or in Cyprus.

To that extent the Greek complaints about Nato are unnecessary and irrational. But at a deeper level they are understandable, not only because of Nato's earlier complaisance towards the Greek dictatorship but above all because of its continued complaisance during and since 1974 towards the de facto partition of Here the finger must be pointed not only at the United States but also at Britain. Under the Treaty of Guarantee Britain had every bit as much right and obligation to intervene in Cyprus as Turkey did, and her military bases in the island gave her the capacity to do so. An ultimatum from Britain to General Ioannidis after the coup of July 15 1974 could very probably have obviated the need for actual military action by either Britain or Turkey. Equally, an ultimatum from Britain to Turkey when the second Geneva conference broke down in August 1974, backed up by an offer to Mr Karamanlis of air cover for Greek troops if it were disregarded, might have impelled Mr Eccyit to dissuade Turkey's generals from turning their legitimate intervention into an illegitimate and apparently permanent occupation. Those were grave and unforgiveable errors of omission. They helped to give the world the idea that Britain had become a toothiess lion incapable of evertaking decisive action to resist aggression - an idea which tragically took root in Burness Airies among other places. Our very different reaction to Argentime aggression in 1982 has done to the Cypriots remains murcpaired. Not that such wrongs can ever be repaired as easily as they are committed: Britain could hardly now, after ten years, suddenly threaten to take military action if Turkish troops are not withdrawn. But both Britain and the United States could and should make it clear to Turkey that their economic and military aid for her is not unconditional. It is as true today as it was in 1974 that "realism in politics is not necessarily served by supporting regimes which reject the values of the alliance they are supposed to defend".

QUIS CUSTODIET?

It is seventy-five years since Liberal ministers sitting on the Committee of Imperial Defence founded the Security Service, MI5. So far, its anniversary has proved a miserable affair, starting with the conviction of Michael Bettaney for trying to spy for the KGB and continuing in recent days with a public exposure of its past differences and dirty linen that has no precedent. It is still difficult to comprehend that the late Sir Roger Hollis, its director-general from 1956 to 1965, was investigated as a possible spy by no less than four inquiries before the Prime Minister cleared him with a Commons statement, in 1981. Last week Mr Peter Wright, for fifteen years an MI5 mole hunter, articulated on Granada Television's World in Action his belief that, "intelligence-wise, it was 99 per cent certain" Sir

Roger was a Russian spy. Mr Wright broke his personal oath of secrecy in the hope that the government would be pressurized by Parliament and the press into commissioning a fifth investigation. The Prime Minister has not obliged. The Opposition, too, was silent on the issue last week. Whether this weekend's disclosure of what purports to be more of the fine print of the inconclusive investigations of the 1940s 1950s and 1960s forces yet another rethink, remains to be seen. Mr Arthur Martin, the MI 5 man who handled the cases of Maclean, Philby and Blunt, said in a letter to The Times that this would be pointless. No amount of re-examination could resolve the Hollis affair.

There is, however, a strong case for a different kind of inquiry, one which goes beyond the search for Stalin's Englishmen, MI5 and its sister service and MI6. The first stage would nize this and act accordingly.

MI6 absorb a relatively small be to compile a kind of Domesamount of the secret vote. About two-thirds of its £125 million goes to the Government Communications Headquarters which, compared to the Security Service, and the Secret Intelligence Service, is both capital and labour intensive. That does not mean that with some 1,000 staff and an annual budget each of about £20 million (precise figures are never available) MI5 and MI6 are not worth subjecting to the Prime Minister's. general drive for Whitehall efficiency. In 1979, Mrs. Thatcher, to the fury of the Ministry of Defence, the Home Office and the Foreign Office (then the main customers of the clandestine agencies), which had taken their share of economies. exempted the secret services from manpower cuts. It is true that in the past five years a few Rayner-style scrutinies have been conducted on aspects of MI5 and MI6 work. These followed the efficiency probes of the near universally reviled Review of Overseas Representation carried out by the Think Tank on SIS and the overseas bits of MI5 in the mid-1970's. But what .. the secret services need is their own Mr Heseltine complete with his MINIS kit for discovering who does what, why and at what cost. Until last week when Mr Heseltine's MoD re-organization was enshrined in a White Paper, many thought that the Chiefs of Staff, along with the legal profession, and the Diplomatic Service, would remain largely immune from reform for the foresceable future. Early next year there will be a change at the head of MI5. There could be no better moment for the preparation of a MINIS-style exercise on the Security Service and her advisers should recog-

day Book on these secret baronies. Then questions should be asked about priorities and valuefor-money. Who should do it? Given the nature of the agencies' work, it would be impossible to employ management consultants. Mr Heseltine has his hands full at MoD. The task needs to be carried out by sharp, reformminded insiders under the supervision of an experienced outsider with a high security clearance. It might be time to recall Lord Rayner himself on a part-time basis. Scrutinising Smiley's People could be his greatest challenge, and much more fun than running Marks and Spen-CCT'S.

Britain needs a successful and efficient Security Service with high morale not just to stop the breeding of a generation of Chemenko's Englishmen but to catch terrorists and to monitor anti-democratic groups on the extreme right and extreme left. Thanks to past and present penetration, its public and parliamentary image is seriously tarnished. At least two things are needed to restore it to health: a string of necessarily private successful operations, and a permanent arrangement for political oversight going beyond the Prime Minister's ministerial group on intelligence, which rarely meets, and its briefing organization, the permanent secretaries' steering group on intelligence. If Parliament's faith in the secret services is to be repaired, the Government will. have, sooner or later, to agree to the foundation of an all-party, joint Commons and Lords select committee on security and intelligence, peopled by senior Privy Councillors. Mrs Thatcher

Unresolved doubts on Warnock

From the Reverend Dr N. M. de S.

Sir, It is truly astonishing that in all the many paragraphs of their report the Warnock committee find no room to address the central question underlying their remit the nature and status of the human foetus.

"Instead of trying to answer these questions directly", they write, "we have, gone straight to the discussion of the question of how it is right to treat the human embryo." (para 11.9). That is, they have circumvented the principal question at issue in the debate and assumed that the approach to it of many moralists is necessarily mistaken. They summarise their arguments, but do not answer them.

The problem which the committee has faced is that merely to raise the question of the nature of the foctus in a serious fashion has implications for the debate. When, example, sperm and ovum meet is homo sapiens alone in failing immediately to reproduce himself, but instead some kind of third thing, organic but not human a nerson potentially but not yet? It is an assumption required for Warnock's conclusions, but not one that will bear sustained examination,

The evidence of modern developments in genetics and embryology has all tended to confirm the commonsense idea that from the point of fertilisation the embryo is already a member of the species as much as you or me.

For this very reason what is decided in the current debate about the treatment of embryos will ultimately affect us all. Before Parliament accepts the idea that they may be grown for experiment it must be convinced that the same grounds used to support such research (which add up largely to its supremely valuable results) could not also one day be used to designate, say, an abandoned handi-capped child with a limited lifespan, or a demented and unwanted geriatric, for the same purposes.

If the case which Warnock accept is admitted, it is public sentiment alone which presently prevents such a development. The arguments are formally identical, as in a parallel case the president and secretary of the British Paediatric Association recently admitted on this page that there is no "moral difference" between abortion and the taking of the life of a new-born.

Public sentiment and the fashionable morality out of which it erises do not remain the same, as the acceptance today of abortion for trivial reasons and the present apparent readiness to consign the smallest children of the race to laboratory vivisection dramatically indicate.

Mis Thatcher, a most consequent thinker, will take time to apply herself to these questions and resist the calls of the scientists and them. We must say "No, never" to embryo-research, and we must say it by statute. If HM Government lead us in such a response to Warnock they will have done their nation an

Food and health From Mr Keith Willoughby

Sir, The welcome report from the Committee on Medical Aspects of Food Policy covering diet and cardiovascular disease (July 13) points out in its introduction that it has attempted to interpret complex evidence in such a way that the conclusions are clear to the general public and those responsible for offering guidance to them. It is therefore surprising and disappointing that your Science Correspondent, in referring to this today, should cloud the issue by misrepresenting this report and misleading the public by categoris-ing eggs amongst high fat foods.

The facts are that eggs are not mentioned anywhere in the entire report. What is shown in table 5.2 is the amount of fat content in certain products, ranging from 59 per cent to 89 per cent. The total fat content of eggs is only around 10 per cent and for that reason obviously does not appear in any table of high fat

It is most unfortunate, therefore, that the experts on the committee should be misquoted, with the attendant danger of misinforming the public about eggs, which in context of the current discussion should be seen as highly beneficial constituents of a healthy balanced

Wigan market

From the Leader of Wigan Metropolitan Borough Council Sir. The article in Wednesday's edition (July 11) about the "end of the road for Wigan market" presented such a one-sided view that I feel I must respond in order to restore the balance.

In the heading you described the market as "one of the North's historic buildings". Whatever the status of other market halls, the hall here in Wigan is very definitely not an historic building in the technically accepted sense of that word, and this is a view which has been confirmed by the Secretary of State on several occasions, the most recent being June, 1983 and May,

It was described by the inspector or that the scheme includes a July 12.

Regional initiative from grass roots

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Sir, In commenting (leading article, July 19) on the wasted expenditure of £77m in support of Mr DeLo-rean's venture in Northern Ireland, you draw two conclusions regarding the wider issue of regional policy. First, that assistance to firms is better given as tax breaks than as cash handouts; second, that depressed regions can only be returned to prosperity by making them more attractive places in which to invest.

Last December, the Government issued a White Paper, Regional Industrial Development, and asked for comments. It is understood that a package of regional policy measures is to be announced later this year. The indications so far are the Government presently regards regional policy as socially necessary but lacking economic justification.

A fundamental reason for this view is that policy has come to be regarded as essentially a regional zero-sum game, to redistribute a given number of jobs, so that more jobs for one region is equated with more unemployment elsewhere. What is lacking in current thinking, and has been lacking for many years, is an appreciation of what regional policy, conceived differently, might contribute to long-term national economic growth as a part of a programme for regional prosperity.

Such a policy must take a long-term view of regional needs to identify the specific problems that inhibit private initiatives and enterprise. The key problems are found in the quality of the physical and technical infrastructure, the availability of skills in the labour force and the ability to generate local enterprise from within the regions.

The problem is that these issues cut across the boundaries of Government policy organization -Department of Trade and Industry, Department of the Environment, Manpower Services Commission, etc - and there are no adequate means for bringing all their policy initiatives into focus in a regional context. This institutional lack is felt most acutely in the regions of England, which do not have their own development agencies comparable to those in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland.

In the last resort the regions must be helped to help themselves.

From Mr and Mrs John Rabson Sir, As an offshoot of your correspondence about vice-chancellors with 40 or more letters after their names, we wonder how one indicates multiple PhDs, etc.

When a friend of ours was about to receive his second (earned, not honorary) PhD we wondered whether he would then boast a PhD and Bar. This apparently, was not to be. There seems no provision in this country, though the Germans do go in for "Doctor Doctor". That, of course, would never do in

Leaving Beatrix Whatever form financial incentives Potter well alone

Mr R. J. Q. James

Sir, The proposal by American entrepreneur Robert Jani to create a Beatrix Potter theme park in the Lake District (report, July 17) fills me with horror. Further to discover that Penguin Books, having acquired the titles from Frederick Warne, are joining in this latest piece of exploitation of children's classics for motives best known to themselves, but superficially purely for profit.

Does he hope we shall shuffle from Mrs Tiggy Winkle's cottage to Jemima Puddleduck's farmyard, to Pigling Bland's scene of captivity, delighted that he and Penguin have managed to "bring to life" the characters into which Beatrix Potter very successfully breathed life nearly 80 years ago?

He, no doubt, will argue that it will be a boost for tourism in Cumberland and Westmorland. The Lakeland poets discovered many long years ago that the area is one which needs no further enhancement and that nature has created the greatest tourist attraction without any help from the plastic idea of entrepreneurs and the investment of publishers.

I urge all concerned to think again very seriously before embarking on this scheme. They only have to look at similar ventures which, after a short period, become tatty and debased and destroy that which was good and held dear by many. Yours faithfully,

From Mr Peter Cotes

Sir. Whilst splendidly evoking the backstage atmosphere now prevalent at the Theatre Royal Drury Lane during rehearsals for the forthcoming musical to be staged there. Mr David Thomas's article, "Come and meet those dancing feet" (July 16) omits to mention the name by which the time step (the basic time step) is invariably referred to: "Shuffle off to Buffalo".

It may be titled "42nd Street" to fit the show's title, but the routine that is danced to that song was (long ago) nicknamed "Shuffle off to Buffalo" to fit an early tap-dance tune by that same title.

Most dancers would agree that to term it anything else backstage (and this is after all a "backstage musical" based upon the film, circa 1933, of the same name) would lack the same reality as most actors would find if, in a dressingroom gathering, any of their number referred to The Merchant of Venice as anything other than "The Merchant". It is curious because of this unprecedented endorsement of the title "saint" - the saints usually accepted as such being generally pre-Reformation and curious because of what More died for. (The Alternative Service Book lists him as "Martyr"). He died for the papacy, or to put it another ay, for the independence of the church from state control:

MISS LALLY BOWERS Versatile stage actress

Lally Bowers, the actress, Wang in Lady Precious Stream. who died on July 18 at the age of 67, was a player of unstrained versatility; she said once that among her favourite characters were Candida, Millamant, and Maggie in Hobson's Choice. With her direct manner and a voice deep and exceptionally clear, she built through a busy life upon the basis of her repertory experience, and that eft her ready for most parts. especially those that were the epitome of commonsense. A helpful, endearing colleague, she was welcome in any cast.

Born on January 21, 1917, at Oldham, where she was edu-cated - her real name was Kathleen - she worked as a secretary before theatre training with James Bernard, the re-doubtable Manchester elo-cutionist who had Robert Donat among his pupils. At 19, she was understudying during iden. Payne's direction at Stratford-upon-Avon, going later into seven years of intensive, repertory at Manchester and Sheffield. Her major chance came with he Old Vic's war-time company at Liverpool Playhouse, in parts as diverse - foreshadowing her whole career - as Viola, Nora (4

Going to London in 1944, she was first noticed widely as the cigar-smoking George Sand (Baroness Aurore Dudevant) in ummer in Nohant at the Lyric, Hammersmith, during July 1946. #### FINANCE AND INDUSTRY

Executive Editor Kenneth Fleet

Is buying a house still the best way to save?

Today the Chancellor will publish his Green Paper on the future of building societies; an issue of national economic concern, not only because the societies are now providing mortgage finance for six hold nearly half the liquid assets of the personal sector.

The main question, of course, is how far the traditional markets between the societies and the banks are to be moved; but these regulatory changes are taking place against a shifting background of personal preferences for housing and other assets of polentially greater significance. assets of potentiary greater significance.

"Mr. Nigel Lawson's general intentions are known; since he provided edited highlights, so to speak, in a speech just a couple of weeks ago. The building societies new framwork of behaviour will still confine them mainly to the business of housing finance. If they wish to behave entirely like banks, they must apply for company status, subject themselves to the Bank of England and strengthen their

Even Without leaping over the new divide, however, the societies will be able to enlarge their business considerably to toy with a little unsecured personal lending and to offer a whole range of financial services - though only on an agency basis. And there are broadly three reasons why they should want to do so.

The first and most obvious is that the banks have, father late in the day, come to compete seriously for mortgage business. The building societies used to operate a kind of closed financial circuit taking in imoney from the personal sector to lend back to it for home purchase, leaving financial flows to the rest of the economy unaffected.

This was the societies' classic defence against complaints that tax privileges for housing were starying the economy of funds for industrial investment. Now the banks have broken the closed circuit, though the Bank of England soon raises a warning eyebrow when it thinks too much bank lending is going towards house

A more telling defence by the societies (and now the banks, too) is, however, that the impact on the economy caused by taxadvantaged mortgage finance is better measured by the share of real resources devoted to housing construction. And on this measure – housing investment as a share of gross domestic product - Britain has actually had a lower score than any of the other six major economies for the past

But this statistic is not a full answer to the question of how housing subsidies may alter relative prices and personal preferences. This issue is addressed in a report, published coincidentally today, by the Policy Studies Institute.

Present housing policies the PSI report argues, distribute subsidies in an inequifable fashion, raise house prices and hence rents by inflating artificially the demand for housing, and distort personal choice. It is not mortgage tax relief that distorts the market, says this report, since businesses building houses for rent can get relief on interest payments; but the lack, since 1963, of a tax on imputed rent for owner-occupiers, together with the exemption of owner-occupied housing from capital gains tax, particularly in times of

But the PSI report also concludes that housing subsidies are much lower than they were. Subsidies to council tenants have fallen, obviously enough, because of sharp rises in council rents; and subsidies to owner-occupiers have declined through the drop in inflation and the partial indexation of capital gains tax.

Property prices oscillate much more than general inflation. Even so, a rise in average house prices of only 25 per cent over the past four years is strangely weak, compared with 38 per cent on average prices; and it suggests there may be some major underlying changes taking place in the housing market.

In 1914, only 10 per cent of house holders owned their homes, by 1981 the property-owning democracy embraced 60 per cent. But the subsidies, as the PSI report shows, probably reached their peak in the 1970s. Owner-occupation was then given an added fillip by cut-price council house sales and higher council rents.

Roughly 70 per cent of households headed by married men aged 30-44 were found to be owner-occupiers by the 1981 census. This change will be carried up through the generations: the Government's recent projections for retirement income assumed that the proportion of the elderly who own their own homes will rise from 48 per cent today to 70 per cent in the early years of the 21st century. But among younger age groups, owner-occupation already may have reached the level from which further increase will be slower.

For building societies, which in the past 60-odd years have increased their assets a hundredfold - in real terms, mark you on the back of the house-owning scramble, this change is the second reason for diversification: a sensible desire to use their formidable networks of retail outlets for other business. But it is underscored by a third change, which is the growing attraction of other assets than home ownership.

This will not, pace the PSI, come about because the Government grasps the nettle of inequitable housing subsidies. No party is going to commit electoral suicide by the reintroduction of tax on imputed rent. But the Government is increasing meanwhile the attraction of other forms of personal investment, admittedly in a slightly erratic way. Together with the decline in inflation and a high "real" interest rate, this had increased dramatically the appeal of financial assets.

No financial calculation can ever wipe out the sense of security generated by ownership of your own home. But when the least attractive bank deposit account now offers a real rate of return, even after tax, the balance of advantage has clearly

Most significant of all, perhaps, are the changes slowly coming about in the pensions system. Once upon a time a house was the only personal transcrable asset that could be acquired through the escape batches in the tax system. If the "portable pension" ever becomes a reality

- and if Inland Revenue rules are ever changed to permit pension schemes to generate tax-free capital sums which can be left to your children, not just income streams that die with you - the way in which you strive to join the propertyowning classes will be a matter not just of income but also of choice. The Chicago Board of Trade today begins trading a new rival, the Chicago Mercantile stock market index futures Exchange's International Moncontract which it hopes will help to recapture the initiative average of 47,000 contracts in June, making it the IMM's riggest contract.

By contrast, FT-SE 100 index offered by the London International Financial Putures Exchange managed just over 2.400 contracts for the whole of last week.
The MMI, on which the American Stock Exchange trades options, has a very close correlation with the Dow-Jones industrial average. Dow Jones took legal action against the Chicago board to prevent the exchange from using its index

Composite insurers bounce back

Derek Chambers

The composite insurance was a combined pretax deficit, sector has outperformed the broad British market averages by nearly 40 per cent since the autumn of 1982. In the previous with only Phoenix and Guardian Royal Exchange remaining in the black. As in 1974-75, weak profits have gone with a strong share price relative. One third of the sector's seven years the sector had underperformed the market by almost 50 per cent.

The sector's highest standing relative to the market during current market value represents shares issued in the period 1974-81 by way of rights issues. In other words, the composites the past 20 years was in May 1975. Combined pretax profits increased the supply of their of the six main listed; stocks own paper by 50 per cent over a currently in the sector (Comperiod almost exactly coinciding with their underperformercial Union, General Accident, Guardian Royal Ex-mance, change, Phoenix Assurance, Since 1981 the need for Royal Insurance and Sun external capital has been sharply reduced. The six companies' 10 paper issues of 1974-81 raised under £600m but in 1982-83 they enjoyed capital gains of more than £2 billion combined.

> At the same time as the supply of new paper was drying up, there were actual reductions the composites' shares available to investors. Allianz's purchase of 28 per cent of Eagle Star in 1981 was followed by BAT's purchase of the whole company, completed early this year. Sun Alliance's £400m cash offer for Phoenix Assurance, again reduce the supply of Last year the six main British listed composites wrote just under £8 billion of non-life premiums worldwide - around 30 per cent of this turnover arose from domestic British risks (motor, fire and accident), with the balance split almost evenly between the US and other overseas business. The non-US overseas business includes Canada, Australia and South Africa. These three territories reached an underwriting cycle trough in the early 1980s and then recovered. Results are not likely to improve much further. in the US on the other hand, profit margins are at rock bottom. Underwriting losses for the industry have been approximately 20 per cent of premiums whereas investment income runs at under 15 per cent of running out and cash flow recommend above average squeezed there are increasing weightings. signs of firming premium rates, particularly in troublesome lines such as commercial auto packages. In Britain, commercial lines came under severe pressure during the early 1980s re-cession, when reduced risk volume coincided with an influx of capacity to the business (partly from overseas, but mainly from the increased capitals of leading local playcapitals of leading local players). As the market is a fairly disciplined one the industry took steps in the autumn of 1982 to avoid cut-price quotations based on madequate information (such steps having to be taken carefully to avoid infringing anti-cartel laws). Rating levels have begun to improve for the heavy lossmaking lines, commercial and fleet motor and commercial packages. Commercial Union, General Accident and Royal Insurance in the past three quarters, all have heavy exposure to the recovering US and British commercial lines, and thus premiums. With tax credits these are the stocks in which we

The uniners' dispute was too early to reassure foreign or domestic investors that the worst may be over. But it is not too early to highlight the influence foreign investors may have on the gilt-edged market especially, as recent history reminds us, in the period immediately following a ster-

Quite slim, would be the initial response. Foreign con-cern with the British market has been relatively slow to develop. After all, the Thatcher experi-

The miners' dispute was given relatively little weight in its initial stages. Foreign inves-tors were influenced doubtlesslyby many domestic commen-tators who tended to dismiss this dispute as little more than likely impact on the real comomy. The Thatcher Government was expected to strengthen its standing by quickly winning the dispute. Mr Scargill was deemed to be Mrs Thatcher's new General Galtie ri. Events have not turned out quite like that, however.

First, the effects on the real economy were greater than expected. April's extreme trade figures were the first evidence of how the miners dispute had been underestimated. Poor industrial output evidence fol-lowed. The inflation shock has yet to be delivered. Consensus forecasts for inflation over the next year have risen by 1-2 per Secondly, the dockers' strike came like a bolt from the blue. It was purely a political strike and conjured up an image of widespread dissension with an accident-prote Government.

The fact that the EEC rebates. the Liverpool budget resolution and the privatization programme have all been political successes for the Government count for nothing. They are not-perceived to be successes.

Finally, in the eyes of many foreigners sterling was believed to be overvalued relative to the major European currencies. A thought to be inevitable.

Now that sterling has fallen, this last factor may be removed. But the rebuilding of confidence in the United Kingdom has still some way to go. Foreign investors need to be assured

Apart from their perception of a higher British political risk. what will discourage them from following this path? There are otentially two discouraging factors. The first is the view that the dollar has become the Swiss franc of the 1980s. The second is the potential issue of bearer bonds. The potential impact of extending the range of bearer securities far exceeds that of bolishing withbolding taxes for non US residents on US interest

> US investment programmes could push up gilt prices

Then the probability of dollar downwrn encouraging greater international diversification by US funds reduces. We do not believe that the dollar is permanently exhibiting the characteristics of the Swiss

Consequently the movement of US funds into the British gilt market could become a power-ful bullish influence. But not yet. The political risks in Britain are perceived to be too high and there has been no final sterling sell-off against the dollar pattern characteristic of earlier crises - and the traditional signal to expect a swift and

County Bank makes its name paving the way

County Bank, the merchant banking arm of the National banking arm of the National Westminster group has emerged as the leading Unlisted Securities Market banker—and is keen to consolidate its position.

During the three and a half years of the junior market County has handled 14 USM flotations and if there are no last magnite hittens, it will be another six this year. launch another six this year.

The bank's latest offering. Berkley Group, made an imat 85p, shares of this custom built housing group, climbed to 99p. County is comfortably ahead of the rest of the banks in the new issue stakes, sithough, among brokers, Phillips & Drew, has chalked up 17 and has two being unwrapped this week. Nearest banking rival is another merchant bank; also owned by a clearer, Barclays

Mr David Reed, the senior director at County's corporate advisory division, is an unashamed USM fan. He believes that eventually the market will merge with the fringe over-the-counter markets

In the meantime, he believes

In broad terms County Bank looks at a candidates' role in its particular market; its management the vendors' reasons for seeking 2 USM presence (a lucrative retirement is one reason for rejecting a proposed flotation); and its post-share sale size - anything under £5m is regarded as too small).

The fifth, and possibly the most important factor in the County Bank eyes, is just what a USM candidate will generate in that the USM will progress but, finure business for the bank like all markets, endure the once it achieves its share sale.

County Bank suggests that its own feet, about £50,000, are far downturn, with the summer from economic. They can only season, has hindered the flow of be justified if the bank retains a close association with the client

There is a highly competitive fee structure for a USM presence: Shopping around among the bankers and brokers is now a required performance

County Bank says that after the initial meeting it then, if it decides the exercise is worth continuing, spends four or five days with the prospective USM candidate talking to almost everybody with a significant role in the company. Many, candidates fail to survive much as confrontation.

The bank's next candidate, if all goes well, will not arrive until September. But the observance of the City silly season when few share offers are made has not spread to Phillips &

Drew. This week details of Phillips & Drew's Bine Arrow Holdings flotation should be announced. The merchant banker is Lloyds Bank International.

Blue Arrow, run by the former Brengreen man Mr Tony Berry, originally intended to float just part of itself. But wiser voices prevailed and Blue Arrow is now expected to arrive in one piece - ranging from job shops to travel agencies.

Next week Phillips & Drew

will unveil a computer company.
This rush of USM new comers must be viewed against some impressive arrivals - such as Berkeley Group and DDT Group, the computer maintenance operation, which has climbed to 173p from a 1356 placing price.

But the USM has just suffered one of its worst reverses, the offer for sale of Entertainment Production Services, the video group. Against an offer for sale price of 58p the shares trailed at a mere 50p. Not surprising with 92 per cent left with the underwriters.

Mr Michael Beloff, QC and Miss Judith Beale for Mr Murugananda-rajah; Mr John Laws for the Immigration Appeal Tribunal.

The MASTER OF THE ROLLS said that the issue raised on appeal numed on the wording of section 17(1) of the 1971 Act. The problem under section 17 the appeal was limited to the issue of whether there was another country to which be could be deported. On the facts of the present case there was no other the gressent case there was no other country which the applicant could say was prepared to accept him.

The applicant claimed that he was entitled to political asylum because he was involved in the Tamit movement in Sri Lanka which made him unacceptable to the government of that country. Accordingly, he would be liable to the government of that country. Accordingly, he would be liable to persecution if he were returned.

Mr Muruginandarajah arrived in the UK on a student permit which restricted the terms of his stay as to time and employment. His permit was extended from time to time until August 1980 when any further extension was refused.

until August 1980 when any further extension was refused. His appeal against that refusal made under section 14 of the 1971 Act failed in August 1981. In January 1982 he was arrested as an overstayer and charged under section 24(1)(b)(i) of the 1971 Act. He was convicted and recommended for deportation. The Home Office were then aware that the applicant chained political asylum. In April 1982 the Home Office made a deportation order,

Apart from the right of appeal suggested in the present proceedings there was no right of appeal because the applicant being a convicted person was unable to appeal against person was unable to appeal against the deportation order except by way of the criminal appeal system. There was authority for the proposition than an appellant could not raise the question of political asylum on a criminal appeal: see R v Nazari ([1980]! WLR 1366).

Owners' implied indemnity

Before Mr Justice Neill

[Judgment delivered July 3]

The obligation imposed upon charterers by clause 8 of the New York Produce Exchange standard form charterparty, to load, stow, trim and discharge cargo at their own expense, gave rise to an implied general indemnity, for the benefit of the owners, against the consequences of the master signing bills of lading which made the owners liable to third parties in respect of damage flowing from bad stowage. That indemnity could not be enforced until, at the earliest, the owners liability to a third party had been ascertained, and accordingly, been accertained, and, accordingly, only when liability had been so ascertained did the owners' cause of action against the charterers under action against the charterers under the indemnity accrue.

Mr Justice Neill so held in a reserved judgment in the Commercial Court of the 'Queen's Bench Division, dismissing an appeal by the charterers. Telfair Shipping Corporation, against the award of a sole arbitrator who had awarded the owners of the motor vessel Caroline. P. Increa Carriers SA, sums claimed under an implied indeno-nity arising from the terms of a time charterparty made between them on the NYPE standard form, and had-rejected the charterers' contention that the claim was time-barred. Mr Jeremy Cooke for the charterers Mr Jonathan Hirst for the owners.

MR JUSTICE NEILL said that bags constaining a cargo of rice had been damaged as a result of bad stowage, which had, occurred in December 1974. No rice had been discharged from the ship before April 2, 1975; judgment had been discharged from the ship before april 2, 1975; judgment had been discharged from the ship before april 2, 1975; judgment had been discharged from the ship before april 2, 1975; judgment had been discharged from the ship before april 2, 1975; judgment had been discharged from the ship before the given against the owners by an Iraqi court in December 1978 on a chaim court in December 1978 on a claim by receivers in respect of the affected cargo; and the plaintiffs had-then claimed to be indemnified by the charterers. The arbitrator's appointment being perfected on March 30, 1981.

Therefore, if the owners' cause of action had accounted before March 30, 1925. These designs around the 1975, their claim would be time-barred. The arbitrator had found that the cause of action had arisen. that the cause of action had arrisen, at earliest, on completion of the discharge, that is, or April 21, 1975. The questions which now fell to be determined were what was the nature and extent of the indemnity to be implied when in owners' agent was required under the terms of a charterparty to sign bills of lading "as presented", and at what point did time begin, to tun for the purpose of a hightenion period when the beneficiary of such an indemnity sought to enforce in?

It was common ground that the fills of lading which the charterparty had obliged the master to sign had imposed obligations on the owners which were more oncrows than those imposed on them by the

than those imposed on them by the charterparty, and therefore that clause 8 entitled the owners to an implied indemnity despate the

that the indemnity was against liability, whereas the owners had argued that it was against the signed that it was against the consequences of the master signing the more onerous bills of lading.

His Lordship referred to Krager & Co Ltd v Moel Tryvan Ship Co Ltd [1907] 1 Q8 809, 825, 828, 832, CA ([1907] 1 OB 809, 825, 828, 832, CA and [1907] AC 277, 276, 277, 281, HL), Elder, Dempster & Co v Dunn & Co ((1909) 15 Com Cas 49), Danson Line Ltd v Aktiengesellschaft Adler für Chemische Industrie of Berlin ([1932] 1 KB 433, 439, 440), Strathlorne Steamship Co Ltd v Andrew Weir & Co ((1934) 50 L1 L Rep 185, 193, 194, 195), Bosma v Larsen ([1966] 2 Lloyd's Rep 22, 25, 27), County & District Properties Ltd v C. Jenner & Son Ltd ([1976] 2 Lloyd's Rep 728, 732, 734, 735) and R. H. Green and Silley Weir v Britisk Railways Board ((1980) 17 Build LR 94).

From a consideration of those cases, it appeared that it was possible to identify at least three ways in which a person, A, who had become liable to B, might be able to obtain redirest from C.

The first was by an action for damages for breach of contract or warranty. In such a case A would be in a position to claim that the incurring of his liability to B flowed directly from an act of C which constituted a breach of a contract. directly from an act of C which constituted a breach of a contract between A and C or of a warranty given, by C to A. The damages would be assessed in accordance with the priciples in Hadley v Baxendale (1854) 9 Exch 341). The cause of action would date from the date of breach.

date of breach. The second was by a claim on an express indemnity, in such a case the extent of the indemnity and the time at which the cause of action arose would depend on the construction of the contract.

If the indemnity were an indemnity against liability, as it was bild to be in Bosma v Larsen, the cause of sction would come into existence when A incurred liability to B. It might be that in certain circumstances a liability might be circumstances a liability might be incurred for that purpose when the liability was still merely contingent see Forster v Oursed & Co. ([1982] I WLR 86). If, however, the indemnity were a general indemnity, as the relevant clause was held up be in R. H. Green & Silley Weir v Resident Residents. British Railways Board. then time would not begin to run against A for the purpose of pursuing his indemnity against C until A's liability to B had been established habitity to B had been established and ascertained.

The third was under an implied indemnity. Such an implied indemnity would, prima facie, be a general indemnity of the kind recognized by the common law, as explained by Lord Justice Fletcher Moulton in Incre Richardson ([1919] 2 KB 705, 712).

equity only to the extent that such a person could now seek declaratory relief as soon as his liability had been ascertained: see Linlewood v George Wimpey & Co. Ltd. ([1953] 2 QB 501,519).

Accordingly his Lordship had concluded, though not without hesitation, that the implied indemnity to which the owners were entitled in this case was an indemnity against the consequences of the owners' agent. the master, having to sign bills of lading, and that that indemnity had not become enforceable by action until, at the earliest, the liability of the owners to the receivers' had been ascertained by the latest event in by the Iraqi court in December 1978. It was very doubtful, on the facts tory relief regarding the charterers' liability under the indemnity before December 1978, and even if it bad, that would not have affected the time at which the cause of action for the recovery of moneys from the charterers had begun to run.

If that were wrong, and time had If that were wrong, and time had begun to run from the moment when the owners first incurred a liability to the receivers, in view of the fact that most of the receivers' claim had been in respect of shortages, the receivers could not have brought a claim in respect of the shortages before, at the very earliest, the commencement of the discharge on April 2, 1975.

Even in respect of the damaged

Even in respect of the damaged bags, the receivers' claim would have been formulated as a claim in respect of the bags discharged in a damaged condition. Accordingly, no actual liability had been incurred to the receivers before April 2, 1975.

The charterers had argued that the relevant date was the date when a contingent liability to the receivers had been incurred – the dates of the bad stowage or of the signing of the bills of lading in December 1974 or January 1975.

While seeing the force of that argument, based on the decision in Forster v Outred & Co, his Lordship had concluded that even if the indemnity were to be construed as an indemnity against incurring a liability, it could not have been invoked by the owners until they had incurred some actual liability to the receivers, and therefore even on that basis, their claim against the charterers would not be time-barthe common law, as explained by Lord Justice Fletcher Moulton in In re Richardson ([1919] 2 KB 705, 712].

Although there was great force in the argument that as a manuer of principle an indemnity which was to

If one went just on the result of a contest, then Herol Graham could be said to have established his middleweight career on foundations as sound as those of the house of Brendan Ingle, his manager, which was put up as collateral to finance the promotion at Barmall Lane, Sheffield, yesterday.

The result will look good in the record books, but it was not a satisfactory one for the 6,500 spectators who raid to make Justle's bours arise. paid to make Ingle's house safe.

Micky Vann, the referee, seemed too hasty in his decision to send the American back to his corner. The cut was not a bad one, it was not bleeding profusely, nor did it later need strickes in the dressing room.

No wonder Billy Gutz, Holmes's manager said of Vann's decision: "It stunk. They should have let it go to the end of the round and then seen the end of the round and then seen what happened in the next round. We were closing up the gaps and sooner or later he would have shown us his body." Holmes said he would not box Graham here again. "He's too safe a fighter. No wonder he does not get hurt. If I fight him again, I will fight in the States."

Graham admitted that the cut might have been the result of a butt. However, the Sheffield boxer should not be faulted. They were both warned four times for bringing their heads dangerously close.

A final round of 69, three under par, for a share of sixth place on 282 might not seem a bad note upon which to end the Open, but Nick Faldo was in no mood to celebrate yesterday. "The fed up," he said as he simuped wearily in an interview room beside the Royal and Ancient cinb house.

The ring was the minimum size of 16ft, which should have been to the American's advantage. Before the bout started, Billy Gutz said: "It's a bath-tub of a ring, Made for a fighter. That's one mistake Graham has made," But small though the ring was, Graham remained as elusive as a bar of soap in water. Holmes was never able to land a solid punch.

The American depended on trying to slow down the elusive Graham with right hands, but the pinochea usually sailed harmlessly over Graham's head or fell desperanely short.

It is true that Holmes was closing the gaps at the beginning of the fifth, but it was almost certain that as the fight went further he would grow more and more frustrated. There seemed no reason to think that Graham would have flagged and been caught by the American had the bout proceeded beyond the fifth.

By sharp comparison, Lyle dropped three shots in the first four holes on Thursday, and was never a serious contender. He played a splendid round of 67 yesterday but it was, in his own words, "a money-making day, It was a great pity I didn't get 67 to start with instead of 75."

Brown was six under par for the day at one point, but three patts on the 14th ended his blistering run, and the Road Hole pusished him for a tee shot over the sheds on to a dirt road by the hotel. The cheers of the hundreds of oursands who filled the Champs yaéts yesterday were as great for Elysées yesterday were as great for the Tour de France runner-up, Bernard Hinault, as they were for Laurent Fignon, for the second successive year. Those French crowds were cheering as much in admiration for their former idol as they were for the panache of Fignon. The two French rivals conducted a personal wendetts from the personal vendetta from the coment that Hinault won a closely moment that Hinault won a closely disputed prologue time trial in the French capital, 24 days and 2,500 miles ago. Fignon has openly criticized Hinault during the race for what he called fortle attacks during the Alpine stages. But it was the very nature of Fignon's brave breaks, boh up and down hill, that opened out the race and gave Fignon the opportunity to score two spectacular mountain-top victories. That Hinault still managed to take second place proved that if he

England span the generations as Pocock returns to Test squad

One new cap, Richard Ellison from Kent, is in the England party for the fourth Test match sponsored by Cornhall, starting at Old Trafford on Thursday, and one prodigal son, Par Pocock, is welcomed back. Willis, with Gower and his advocate, holds on to his place.

Willis, with Gower and his advocate, holds on to his place, but not Pringle, who played in the first three Tests, or Cowans, who played in none of them but was in the 12 each time.

Ellison is 24, a hefty Old Tonbridgian, who bats left-handed, aggressively, and bowls right arm at measure pace, with an outswinger in his repetite. This season he and Alderman, the Australlian Test player, have been howing the same sort of stuff in the Kent side. Both have taken 44 wickets, Ellison's costing him 17.95 and Ellison's costing him 17.95 and Alderman's 25.68. Ellison is an strings to his bow he will be under less pressure than a young batsman coming into the

Although Pocock will be 38 in September, he is eternally youthful. He so loves the same that it is always a tonic to talk to him. On the eve of the third Test match between Englandand West Indians in Barbados in February 1968, Timus had a bathing accident which re-moved several toes and also his chance of playing again on the tour. That evening Pocock then only 21, came to my room, asking for a Window Lawrence asking for a Wisden. He wanted to look up the records of the great off-spiners in the game, a

Of his 17 Test matches, only three have been in England, the last of these against West Indies in 1976. Since then a shortage of runs has led to Miller, Willey and Marks, among others, being preferred to him, because of their superior batting. Now, after an eight-year gap, Pocock's perseverence and enthusiasm have been rewarded.

I noticed that in their Sunday newspaper columns during the Headingley Test match both Fred Trueman rest match both fred Trueman and John Snow seckoned the time had come for Willis to give way. ## Abrahams upstages Willis in poor final

On the form shown in the Benson and Hedges Cup final at Lord's on Sajurday, it was a job to know how Warwickshire came to be so strongly funcied to win it. Lancashire, who beat them by six wickets with 12.2 overs to spare, were much the sharper side.

It was a disappointing match; set only because Warwickshire never quite came grips with it. As a showpiece, it highlighted the current weaknesses in English cricket. The only high class innings was played by a West Indian, Rallicharran, albeit a holder now of a British passport; and although Allott howled some good opening overs and Simmons performed his containing role to near perfection, there was none of the sheer hostility which wins Test matches.

Lauda's waiting game pays off

The amicipated battle between the Mariborn-McLaren drivers, Niki Lauda and Alain Prost, and the current world champion, Nelson, Piquet of the Parmalat Brabbam team, was won decisively at Brands Elatch, yesterday by Lauda in the British Grand Prix, sponsored by John Player. Lauda was only third when the first part of the 75-hay race had to be stormed during the twelfth when the first part of the 75-lap race had to be stopped during the twelfth lap by an accident, but when the race was resumed for a further 60 laps, after a delay of an hour, he played a waiting game and by the closing laps found himself without a challenger in sight.

After the aggregate times of the two parts of the race had been assembled, Landa was seen to have a winning margin of 42 seconds over Derek Warwick, who drove superbly in his Renault, finishing further 21 seconds shead of the Toleman-Hart of the exciting young Rupulian, Auton Senne, It was the Brazilian, Ayrton Senna. It was the first time on the stimers' rostram of a Formula One race for Senna, and a welcome tonic for the Toleman. Elio De Angelis mantained his unbroken finishing record this year by taking fourth place with an aiting JPS Louis-Renault, which cruised across the finishing line ahead of the Ferraria of Michele Alboreto and Rend Amour.

laps it was reduced to little more than a fast crawl as he slipped steadily down the order into an aggregate seventh place.

Once again Nigel Mansell was out of luck, His car had been suffering from acute understeer all day and after this had caused him to slip down the field he was suddenly put out of the race altogether with a broken fifth gear. The troubled week for the Tyrrell team also failed to have a happy ending, with Stefan Johansson's car unable to make the restart because of damage sustained by raming over wrechage from an early accident, and Stefan Bellof finishing well down in eleventh place after a race in which the power deficiency of his car was demonstrated all too clearly.

A few seconds later, Prost slipped past into the lead at Paddock Hill Bend and Landa followed him through into second place at the bairpin, but before the lap could be completed Jonathan Palmer had lost the steering of his RAM—Hart halfway through Clark Curve. His car slid off the course charged the barrier broke up and was soon covered in fire fighting powder. Like barrier broke up and was soon covered in fire fighting powder. Like the drivers involved in the earlier incident, Palmer was uphurt, but with three disabled cars in vulnerable positions the stewards decided to hall the race for the track to be cleared.

After the restart, taken by only 19 of the original rutmers. Piquet was immediately overtaken by Prost, who led for a further 26 laps until his gear problems, at which point Landa took command, hotty pursued by Piquet and with Warwich breaking clear of a developing battle between De Angelis and Senna. Once again typs choice had played an important role and victory had gone to a driver who perhaps more than any other with the possible exception of Piquet, knows how to race to win while knows how to race to win simultaneously taking the possible effort out of his car.

The yellow jersey was under the impression that Jules was behind him, but as he turned min the Champs Elysee for the final time be looked back and saw that it was Vanderserden in his wheel, not Jules. As Hignon banged his handle bars in frustration, Vanderserdea launched a unheatable sprint along the right hand side of the world's most tamons boulevard.

Hinault tried to follow, but he was passed first by literomer Jules and then by Hoste.

By scoring eight more paints than Kelly with his third place, Hoste won the green persey by a four-point margin, the smallest ha the competetion's 32-year history.

It is somewhat galling to Kelly that he has gone through the Tour de France for a second year without adding to his career total of five Spectacuar mountain-top victories.

That Hinault still managed to take second place proved that if he had raced defensively he would have been able to stay with his former understudy, Perhaps then he would have finished fewer minutes behind Fignon. But that is not Hinault's style. "I will fight until the last breath in my body," he told a French journalist last week.

Yesterday Hinault tried his utmost to win the final stage, a feat the achieved two years ago. But there were too many other factors that made this impossible.

Fignon, for instance, was eager to help Pascal Jules, his friend and team colleague, win on his twenty-hird birthday, Frank Hoste, who lost his green jersey of points leaders to Sean Kelly on Saturday, was desperate to win it back. And the victory-bereft Panasonic-Raleigh team were trying anything to give team were trying anything to give their sprinter Eric Vanderaerden the scent of success.

If he ever deserved such an bonour, it was on Saturday, when he lost the 32-mile time trial through the beautiful vineyard of Beautifuls to Fignon by a mere 48 thousandths of a second. ## Wood wins the big match

The Canadian brothers Jamie and Hugh Kidd opened the defence of their little in the best possible of the international 14ft dingly

in the area before, they looked completely at home, though perhaps they were fortunate that the Northeast coast was in benevolent mood. "Wait until it blows", the locals say, with relish.

In yesterday's gentle introduction, over a shortened course, there was no opportunity to assess the

The match of the day — many said, the match of the world championships — lived up to expectations at Westburn Park, Aberdeca, yesterday when Willie Wood, of Scotland, beat the defending champion, David Bryant of England, 21—12.

Twice already, against Spencer Wilshine (Wales) and Ceril Bransky (Israel), Bryant has turned imminent defeat into victory. He could not quite do it against Wood, but came near enough to give the march a memorable finish, making up for some fairly anonymous bowls in the preceding stages.

By Gordon Allan inspired Wood, with his last delivery, to turn in his acarest bowl delivery, to turn in his acarest bowl delivery, to turn in his acarest bowl for the winner. The cheers echoed across the city roofs.

David Corkill, (Ireland) maintained his unblemished record by beating. Shaun Patton (Fiji) 21—17 and James Haggarty (Kenya) 21—17.

Moorcroft has it in mind to reawaken an old dream

David Moorcroft's attempt to win an Olympic gold medal by reproducing the circumstances which led to his world 5,000 unctres record two years ago is working so far Ris victory in 3,000 metres here, then dis-the Dream Mile here late on cussed how they might conspire Saturday evening - one of a alternately delighted and distressed the British contingent in 3min 50.95secs was exactly what he had hoped for, being just over a second outside the time he did in 1982 two weeks before running 13min 00.41sec. both races being in the Bislett

Moorcroft leaves for Los Angeles today with a similar lapse of time, just over two weeks, until his Olympic 5,000 metres. But, he said, this year's training, marred by a recurrent virus infection, was nowhere record training. Also his "natu-ral pessimism" left him worried about the prospect of three races, heats, semi-final and final in three days, when he has only had three races altogether this

The organizers of the Dream Mile - under contract to ABC Televisom of the United States, hence the 11,35pm start, local time - having suffered the shock of Steve Cram's withdrawal, with a foot injury; which may yet threaten his Olympics, were aghast when Sydney Maree pulled out of the race about 15 minutes beforehand. They were then very angry when they discovered that Maree had had an injury, pulled muscles behind the right knee, for a formight.

Maree's subsequent vagueness about his chances of recovery and the airy suggestion that "my friend, Chuck Aragon could take my Olympic place" (he did not know entries closed last week) suggest that even if Maree turns up for his heat in Los Angeles, he is unlikely to get much further. That should cause as many ructions on the United States team as in the continue their contract for the Dream Mile, which finances the Oslo meeting. For nobody else is happy about the late Saturday schedule, which drew only 5,000 people this year.

Colin Reitz's British record in the 3,000 metres steeple chase, 8min 13.78sec establishes him as one of the Olympic favourites, although his scintilating last lap sprint failed to the Olympics due to the eastern block boycott. Reitz and Joseph Mahmond, the Frenchman who is third on the Olympic ranking list, although he ran the flat Mile here late on cussed how they might conspire evening - one of a to feat American Olympic performances that favourite Henry Marsh, whose tactic of starting slowly and finishing quickly can only be by fast mid-race

> Ikem Billy's win in the 800 metres was quite superb. Not only has he reduced his personal best by 1½ seconds in two races in four days, but his time of Imin 44.65sec puts him in the world's top 10. In so Ovett and Peter Elliott, both of whom edged Billy out of an Olympic place. Last year's European junior champion's triumph could not mask Elliott's tragedy. He faded dis-mally to eighth, and is evidently worried about a foot injury, which may prove to be a stress fracture,

Tim Hutchings is getting closer to the 5,000 metres time that injuries have also pre-vented, but his 13min 20.24secs could not stop Alberto Cova, the Italian, who is well on route to his third 10,000 metres gold medal in three years after his victories in the world and European championships.

Shirley Strong is another
Olympic medal favourite who had a successful come-back after two weeks of injury. But her time of 13.32 seconds for 100 metres hurdles indicates some speed work is necessary before she leaves for Los Angeles next week.

Ireland dismiss coach McBride

RUGBY UNION

Willis-John McBride, capped 63 times by Ireland and manager of the 1983 British Lions, is to lose his post as coach to Ireland after only one season. I understand that this firmed today by the Irish Rugby Football Union.

McBrida was voted out of office at ring. It could, however, be difficult for him to continue in that capacity and, although he has made no comment, he may be considering in the unbeaten tour to South Africa in 1974, will be replaced as coach during the coming season by Michael Doyle, capped 20 times as a flanker during the late Sixties, and coach to an exceptionally successful Leinster provincial side over the last others being Jimmy Donaldson, Michael Cuddy and Jim Klernan, brother of the former national coach brother of the former national coach Tom Kierman. Two of the panel are from Leinster, two from Munster, and one, McBride, from Ulster.

Despite the sad fall in McBride's stock over the last 12 months – he had his difficulties with the Lions in New Zealand last summer and then sustained a disastrous champion-ship campaign in which Ireland lost all four games – there will be considerable sympathy for him and, in Ulster, great indignation over his fate.

coach, Tom Kiernan, began his three-year term with a whitewash three-year term with a whitewash but then went on to claim two triple crowns, it was McBride's misfortime to inherit an aging side which would clearly have to be dismantled at a time when there were few obvious replacements. Yet after only two seasons as a provincial coach McBride had made Ulster a formidable side, good enough to undertake a short tour to Romania and return unbeaten, which Scotland were mable to do last May. and return unbeaten, which were unable to do last May.

The feeling persists that mana-gerial success came to McBride too quickly, yet having appointed him coach Ireland clearly should have coach Ireland clearly should have given him more than a few months in which to establish himself. At the same time Doyle's credentials made him a strong contender for the coaching post last year: during his five seasons with Leinster they won the previncial championship four times and shared the fifth, albeit with many of the players who made up the national team.

Doyle, aged 42; won a Blue at Cambridge University in 1965, playing in the same position as that occupied two years earlier by the current English coach, Richard Greenwood. Doyle then played club rugby for Blackrock College and toured South Africa with the Lions in 1968, playing in one international.

Australians in upset

Sydney, Reuter - Tries by R. Reynolds and Moon helped Austra-lia to a 16-9 win over New Zealand in Saturday's first international. Howson gave the All-Blacks an early 3-0 lead with a panalty, but Australia hit back immediately when the No 8, Reynolds gathered a kick from centre and the captain, Slack, crashed over to score.

Australia's other try came in the Anstraia's other try came in the second haif when the stand-off half, Ella, kicked to the left and Moon swooped on the ball to score in the corner. Ella with a panalty and coversion and Gould with a dropped goal were Australia's other while Australia's other while Australia's other scorers, while Hewson, New Zealand's full back, kicked a second penalty and a dropped goal.

Australia's hero was their giant lock, Cutler, who dominated the line-outs.

Raft heads for York

Raft has El Gran Sedor firmly in his sights after making a devastating reappearance in the Steventon Stakes at Newbury on Saturday. Statices at Newbury on Sauricay.

Despite being off the course foralmost a year, he beat the useful

Eljazzi by 12 lengths with Greville

Staticey taking a derisory look over each shoulder.

His main target now is the Benson and Hedges Gold Cup at York next month, a race which is also the intended objective of El Gran Señor. Geoff Lawson, representing Guy Harwood, said: "That was something special. You can see now why we functed him for the Raft broke the two-year-old seven forlong course record at Salisbury last year but missed the later stages of the season because of sore shins. His seasonal debut has been delayed by a pulled muscle received when he was cast in his box in April. It was an excellent day for by the way today, Bedit bury treble with Old Bailey in the Donnington Castle Stakes and owner-brees

Old Bailey, also ridden by Starkey, beat Sergeant Gerard by four lengths. He is unbeaten in his last four starts and will be the stable's representative in the Lanson stable's representative in the Lanson Champagne Stakes at Goodwood. Starkey was mableto do the weight on Leadburn, giving Ray Cochrane his first ride for Harwood. He made the most of the opportunity, bringing the colt home a length winner from Petrizzo, with Starkey transfer while definet on Videlia. ironically tailed off last on Vidalia.

Bedtime completed a double for Leadburn in the Moriand Brewery Trophy, and also won with Violado at Newmarket.

Bedime completed a double for Tony. Ives, earlier successful on Andi Alja, when beating Teleprompter by two and a half lengths in the Earld of Burns Stakes at Ayr. Dick Hern will now aim him at the group three Prix Gontaut-Biron over one and a quater miles at Dearville on August 11. "Judging by the way he won over 10 furlones." by the way he won over 10 furlongs today, Bedtime should get one and a half miles?, Lord Halifax, his owner-breeder said.

Sun Princess pleases

After racing at Newbury, Steve Cauthen rode Sun Princess in a gallop in readiness for Saturday's king George VI and Queen Elizabeth Stakes at Ascot (Michael Stakes at Asco guiep in readiness for saturdays either be Sallor's Dance, who was in King George VI and Queen Elizabeth Stakes at Ascot (Michael has done the job for her before, or Phillips writes). Sun Princess went noticeably better than she had in a similar gallop on the same course in the spring before the Coronation Cup and Dick Hern expressed Goodwood. Desirable for the Nassau Stakes and Gildoran for the Goodwood Cup.

Princess Pati stakes claim to three-year-old fillies' title

From Our Irish Racing Correspondent, Dublin

Trick, the French Oaks winner, to be rated the best three-year-old filly be rated the best times-year-old fully in Earloy, with a reconstruction run in fall one Gilliown Sud Irish Oaks at the Carragh on Saturday. She inflicted a two-length defeat on the Epsom Oaks winner, Circus Plume, and in the process clipped a fifth of a second off the track record set by Tambourine II in the first running of the Firsh Suprent Desire 22 years of the Firsh Suprent Desire 22 years.

for she made virtually all the moning. After two furlongs the was briefly joined by Marble Run but size questioned away going up the hill and thereafter nothing could get close enough to mount a serious challenge.
As the field fauned out after making the turn for home, Clare Bridge headed the pack in pursuit of the pacemaker. She came under pressure soon afterwards, having at one stage got within two lengths of Princess Pati; and fell back as Lester Piggott finally produced the favour-ite. He switched Circus Plume on to the far rail and got an excellent run for the rest of the race.

Prince Sabo gamble goes astray

The poor record of Englishtrained horses in the Prix Robert Bought at Deauville for 1.2mfrancs as a yearling, Seven Springs was wiming her second race and will now be simed at the Prix Morny at Deauville.

in the hunt and finished

It was still possible to see a cut just above the off-hind hock of Prince Sabo, but Brian Swift did not rince saiot, but brain switt no not think this affected the performance. He said: "He's run a magnificent race and certainly added £200,000 to his value today." Prince Sabo was also the subject of a large bet from England which reduced his price suddenly from 9-1 to a shade over 2-1.

Cameroup can an excellent race Cameroun can an excellent race and was well there until the final furions but the filly obviously did not stay and she will now be kept to five-furiong races. Hi-Tech Girl looked superb in the paddock but had a bad draw. Greville Starkey commented: "She became nervous before going into the stalls and then used her over in teen a mace on used her speed to keep a place on the outside. We were beaten before

Seattle Slew filly fetches top price

Harry Beeby gave the top price of $900,000 at the final session of the two-day Fasig-Tipton sales which ended on Saturday evening. The managing director of Doncaster sales refused to disclose the identity of the client for the Seattle Slew filly, out of the Northern Dancer mare Royal Statute. The yearing is a half-sister to several stake winners, including Awansif. Speculation was rife afterwards as to whether Beeby was intending to resubmit his purchase at Doncaster in September.

The filly was sold by Windfield Farms, Joe Hickey, their general manager, said; "She didn't make it for Keeneland as she was a little backward at the time they made their haspections. But she's improved week by week. And it's nice to have had the star at Fasig-Tip-

Windfields have the best chance of shattering last year's world record price of $10.2m at Keeneland. Fifth price of $10.2m at Keeneland. Fifth into the ring this evening will be the Northern Dancer half-brother to Devil's Bag and Glorious Song. Mr-Hickey was clearly rooting for his champion. "All the big hitters have been looking at him including the Robert Sangster outfit and the Maktoum's Men. We ought to have had him on a conveyor belt as they've hardly been timed to put him back to the box."

"On our grading system I have him 97. That's the highest I've ever gone. Joe Thomas, our vice-president, had Shareef Dancer at 100 before we sold him for $3.5m in 1981. But I prefer this one. He's more elegant and more mature".

Our home buyers were there in force at Fasig-Tipton. The BBA (England) gave $435,000 for a bay (200 by Shurm Bird, one of three of the first crop of the 1980 Dewharst Stakes winner, who was winter Stakes winner, who was winter favourite for the Derby.

the two day assistan. They realised a total of $41,302,000 and averaged $105,903. In 1983, 346 lots fetched $35,648,000 for an average of $103,629. The market is obviously as strong as ever as the new Wednesday sale at Keeneland has been patronised by purchasers who would formarly have sold at Fasig-

Colonei Dick Warden, the man, who gave $10.2m for Smaili Dancer on behalf of Shallth Mohammed last year, supports this spinion. "Prices are sure to be up next week. I've just seen a colt by Sassafras, sold for $225,000. You can't give them away in Europe."

As expected, the ban on imports to Britain, France and Ireland has been litted, provided that the purchases are quarantined for, a period of 30 days outside the sign of Kentucky. Commenting on this Ted Bossett, the chainman of Keeneland Association — Incorporated, said: "We're assurably glad that the general case of the part of the position of the grant of the position of the pos "We're naturally glad that the ge-shead has been given. But we can't really see the reason for this provise. After all, there have only been 131 cases on a handful of Jarms from a costs of around 1,000 Jarms. And the standard of veterinary lapovining and science inside Kenincky is unsurpassed anywhere in the States."

Yesterday, Berry Hills high-lighted the gamble inherent in laying out such enormous sums of mouty on yearlings. The Lambourn trainer was baspecting a chestnat-coll, whose walk was not nearly as compelling as the swaying hipped and the first family attendant. What a compelling as the swaying nippea gait of its female attendant. "What a game," he said. This one could fetch four or five million dollars, 'Ict here am I trying to decide whather it's got a pair of matching front feet. And that's only the start of it. It's not yet that ware old."

a difficult though slightly improving job market, there will be a number of women planning to take secretarial courses. The fact that this is an almost wholly feminine option shows how little change has occurred in students' perceptions of male and female occupational roles it would be almost unheard of for a man to suppose that his best chance of getting a job would be by learning shorthand and typing.

There are two main reasons for a graduate to take secretarial training it is felt that shorthand and typing at least provide an entry into the labour market, and that having "a foot in the door" as a secretary, a graduate can demonstrate her intelligence and have a chance of providing the state of have a chance of promotion to a more interesting and responsible post

The first of these assumptions is undoubtedly true. Whilst as many as one in five arts graduates are likely to be unemployed six months after-taking their degrees, all but a handful of those completing postgraduate secretarial courses find employment weeks of finishing their training. Average starting salaries are between £6,500 and £7,000 p.a. in London; about £1,000 less elsewhere.

However, the second assumption, that secretarial work can act as a stepping-stone to executive or mana-gerial responsibility, is far more dubious. In large companies with a well-defined occupational structure, career progress is likely to be a more senior secretarial role, rather than out of the secretarial rut altogether. At the National Westminster Bamk there are 12 senior secretaries who have managerial status - but they are still secretaries, serving the bank's top executives. The secretarial side has its own structure, and to quote Sarah Townsend, the NatWest's career. planning adviser, "A graduate seeking a banking career should not enter the bank as a secretary."

Though it may be possible for a graduate to enter a large organization as a secretary, such a move is discouraged IBM says that they don't recruit graduate secretaries and the Civil Service Commission com-mented that, "We wouldn't encourage educationally well-qualified people to

Employers' wariness of graduate secretaries is justified by the dissatisfaction often expressed by graduates. after a period in employment. Take these comments from a graduate in her first secretarial job: Bosses tend to lead you up the garden path - it's prestigious to have a graduate as a secretary. But they don't know how to cope with people who are intelligent -

for graduate women and questions their value in the long run there's very little you're allowed to do on your own initiative.".

Some managers hang on to a good secretary, blocking her path to promotion or at least neglecting to encourage her aspirations. A survey of executive secretaries, carried out by the Alfred Marks Bureau in 1982, suggested that managers "do not see their secretaries progressing out of the secretarial channel, often for the selfish reason that they would then be diprived of their invaluable services." One of the respondents was dumning One of the respondents was damning in ther criticism of managerial attitudes: "I have found repeatedly that men feel both intimidated and threatened by well-educated and intelligent women and this fear leads them to seek every opportunity to deny secretaries further training and access to knowledge which could lead to opportunities of promotion."

By its nature, the secretarial role is subordinate and supportive. Other respondents to the survey said "I enjoy being able to help someone else make a success", "I get a great deal of satisfaction from taking the mundane problems off my boss's desk enabling him to devote his time to his main function", "By definition, the secretary/P.A. role is limited." There must be many secretaries who are satisfied be many secretaries who are satisfied with this situation; but why should a graduate, who has spent at least three years learning to think independently, settle for so little?

It is sometimes thought that secretarial qualifications help people to obtain 'glamourous' jobs in publishing broadcasting and public relations. However, while typing is useful, the beaefits of taking a full secretarial course are doubtful. Lyn Beaumont, of "Graduate Appointments", who specialize in the media, says: "If you go in as a secretary, it's very hard to break the mould Graduates have proved themselves already - by getting a degree - so they should be able to start at assistant executive level. If, for example, an English graduate were to ask me about getting into public relations, I would advise her not to take a secretarial course. It is only women graduates who are advised to train as secretaries; why should secretarial work be a stepping-stone for them, when it isn't for men?"

However, there are situations where secretaries can be promoted to responsible jobs in the media. In a small or medium-sized publishing more flexible, the only way to enter may be as a secretary. Secretarial qualifications do at least enable a graduate to make an immediate productive contribution - an important bonus to small firms with limited resources for training. Even with this kind of employer, moderate typing - as opposed to full secretarial training - may be sufficient.

At the BBC, secretaries do have the chance, after working for the Corporation for a year, to apply for jobs such as production assistant. Entry to the BBC is so competitive that the secretarial route may be the only feasible way in, but the climb up the internal ladder can be slow because of the competition for the more exciting jobs.

There is, an argument that with new technology the secretarial role in organizations of many kinds is becoming more responsible and rewarding. Repetitive typing has been taken over by the word processor, the Manpower Services Commission tell of evidence to suggest the emergence of higher level, specialised posts, such as the administrative or correspondence secretary. Automation in the office, and the level of skill needed to make it efficient, suggest that there will be scope for the graduate who is interested in working in a senior support capacity.

A greater degree of flexibility and choice

There are also several advantages is having shorthand and typing to fall back on. A secretary can find work in almost any type of organization. She can often have a considerable degree of flexibility over hours of work, and as a "temp" can sample a variety of Another point in favour of secretarial work relates to the question of bridging the gap between full-time education and a career. Some graduates spend a couple of years between completing their education and finding a career to which they feel they can commit themselves, doing jobs which do not require a whole-hearted involvement.

work may be satisfying, for an interim period, for the person in her early twenties who does not have a clear idea of her career path. She should be wary about using secretarial work as a back door" to anything. Before investing time and money in a secretarial course, great effort should be made to find out if one can find a satisfying job on the strength of a

Green paper to extend building societies' role

By Sarah Hogg, Economics Editor

Big extensions to the role of building societies are to be proposed by the Government in a "green paper" to be published today.

The proposals are expected to The proposals are to be Strictly speaking, this would not outlaw the cartel. Strictly speaking, this would not outlaw the cartel but force the cartel. give the societies virtually all the extensions to their traditioanal activities they have asked for, while still retaining distinc-tions between themselves and the banks. The main changes are expected to include:

 Permission for the building societies to provide limited banking services, including the provision of cheque cards.

 A general extension of their loan business from mortage finance to other kinds of personal lending, though only to a limited extent. The societies will not be allowed to beome general providers of funds to industry or consumer credit, and the green paper will probably examine the kind of limits that should be applied. ● An end to the exemption from the Restrictive Trade Paractivees Act of the building

Ian Baker-Fineh, virtually year. His best placing before staging the Open at St yesterday was tied joint fourth in the recent Glasgow Classic where he won £2,435.

He was fifth in the Australasian Order of Merit and thus qualified to enter the pen. He certainly cut the mustard on one of Britain's toughest courses encouraged, no doubt, by the Royal and Ancient increase of 10 per cent in the prize money to £55,000. He was out on his own until caught in the third round by the irrepressible Tom Watson who plays like a machine.

But that was on Sunday morning. By the evening the 113th Open had crowned its winner. Severiano Ballesteros. Today the circus leaves town. The sellers of pork pies and champagne have folded their tents; the crowds will have departed along with the television crews, the press and the wives and girlfriends of the St Andrews will return to normal. Normal, that is except for the tartan-clad American visitors who will tread the same sacred turf as the champion did the week before. Vast scores will be logged on the ground where Baker-Finch and Tom Watson each shot 66.

The town will no longer be the centre of the world's sporting attention. Husbands will no longer hush their wives and children will once more get to speak to father.

But last week, St Andrean's will say, you should have been-here. We had record weather and some pretty good golf too.

The town had record attendances and the Burghers of St Andrews were overjoyed. By yesterday evening more than 190,000 had paid to watch the games. All this in a town with a population of 15,000 which quadruples in
